"There's a whole bunch or responsibilities when you start to drink and party," he said, adding friends often kill friends when they drink and drive. "I learned through the mistakes and grief of others the power to say no to drugs and alcohol."

Lynch, who now assists in the family business of owning and operating funeral homes in Oakland County, said he sees many examples of the result of substance abuse in his work.

But getting individuals to listen to reason is not easy to do, he said. Most don't until something happens that hits close to home.

"I HOPE you prove me wrong here, but you'll probably bury a classmate this year," Lynch said.

"Until you bury your best friend, your brother or sister, you won't tie in to what I'm saying."

Lynch repeated his plea for the North Farmington students to prove him wrong and added, "I hope you never play Brother Rice again."
