Arthur Wiggins' ceramic wall hangings are on display now in Farmington Hills Branch Library.

2 artists show their work

Sister Ellen Marie Foley has a one-woman show of her paintings in Farmington Branch Library this month. And Arthur Wiggins shows his ceramic wall hangings in Farmington Branch Library. Both exhibits remain on display through Jan. 31. Both artists are members of Farmington Artists Club.

Sister Foley believes that the making and enjoying of art in any of its myriad aspects are among the most humanizing of human activities.

"Both painting and enameling give me a language to express my continuous wonder and response to our world, and to relay other others what I find precious in existence," she said. "I believe art is a gift shared by many to understand and articulate when is deepest in all of us, to touch over and again the creative power of God."

She is a graduate of Mercy College of Detroit and earned her master's degree in art from Notre Dame University.

Wiggins teaches physics at Oakland Community College, writes scientific textbooks and creates his sculptural art forms in his home studio. He started working in sandstone when he was five years old.

"The cars, faces and animals I carved into the sandstone, using a stick, started me on a life long fascination with sculpture in its most generalized sense," he said.

Now his work consists of combining clay with other materials.

Sister Ellen Marie Foley's one woman show of paintings hangs in Farmington Branch Library through Jan. 31.
