

Pendulum swings toward traditional

As proportions grow more luxurious, so do details. Look for pattern styles with fichu necklines, off-the-shoulder cuts, beribboned, cinched waists and bustle backs.

Vogue/Butterick fashion director

Cindy Rose says that double embroidered lace and embroidered sheer fabrics used over silks and satins will be important this year. Lace and ribbons edge cuffs, hems and sashes, and opalescent trims replace metallics for glimmer.

weddings. Vogue/Butterick gowns provide alternate-length options.

Although many styles are elegantly traditional, there are sophisticated silhouettes that are cut out to reveal, short taffeta styles with shawl collars and a modified suit consisting of a lace peplum jacket over a slim skirt.

Many women will choose to dress their wedding parties in a confetti mix of pastel colors. Others this year will decide to choose a color for the wedding party, but allow each participant to determine her own style of dress.

Rose reports that pastel laces debut on mother-of-the-bride and bridesmaid dresses now, looking fresh and newly appropriate.

WHETHER YOUR dress is tailor-made or purchased in a bridal salon, fabric and color traditions prevail. Taffeta, organdy, silk satin, charmeuse and organza remain perennial wedding gown favorites.

And brides-to-be are choosing to dress in white, ivory or antique white, with delicate pinks gaining popularity.

Eye-catcher

Probably one of the biggest fashion changes to sweep the industry concerns headpieces. No shy violets are these pouffy creations that are often what people notice first about the bridal outfit. More and more dropped forehead creations of gems and pearls are being chosen by brides. The one shown here was designed by Lugama and available at Nina's Bridal Salon, 23400 Woodward, Ferndale.
