its best-kept secret title

Administrators there call it Oakland County's best-kept secret — the South Oakland Vocational Education Center in Walled Lake. But the secret's not a secret anymore. Last year, SWOVEC was selected as one of 12 exemplary career opportunity program centers in the nation.

Like most secondary schools, however, the school is in a period of declining enrollment. Today, 222 students attend classes there as opposed to 1,000 in 1981.

"We're just like Hardees and McDonald's," said Jane Clover, but like Hardees and McDonald's," said Jane Clover, we're fighting for students of the secondary school of the seco dents."

The vocational center also is

"The vocational center also is fighting the stigma of a school for those who can't compete in regular high schools, floorer said." Serve students who want Job skills, the silent majority who don't go to counselors except if they're in trouble. The blue collar think of themselves as skill-oriented."

CLOVER VISITS high schools to explain what the school can offer to even the college-bound student. The signma, she said, "is so-cio-economic. West Bloomfield and Farmington Hills kids are screening out the Information." Those in the vocational education classes who are college-bound are operating at a distinct advantage. Clover believes, combining the best of both worlds. They are already "career-specific," she said.

"They're a open to options. They're next to work with. Too many kids are putting off decision-making far too long. These kids have more of a life plan. They re already involved.

In trying to convince more college-bound students to explore SWOVEC classes. Clover tells them. "You can have several carreers in a lifetime and over the college bound students to explore them. "You can have several carreers in a lifetime and over the college bound students to explore them. "You can have several carreers in a lifetime and over the college bound students to explore them." Sub because you tak welding doesn't mean you're going to be a welder for the rest of your life."

Clover said kids have to be Clover said kids have to be reached in earlier years before their minds and those of their parents are set. "We're trying to hit broader programs, open their minds to it at a younger age. And we're attempting to reach the gifted."

SWOVEC STUDENTS come from public school districts — West Bloomfield, Walled Lake, Farmington, Clarenceville, Novi, Huron Valley and South Lyon — as well as private schools within those district boundaries.

Students, mostly high school juniors and seniors, are bused from their home districts for half-day sessions for a variety of courses. The other half day is spent in their home school.

Among the courses offered are: auto body, automated office, auto mechanics, architectural draft-ing, cosmetology, data process-ing, dental and medical office assistant, diesel mechanics, elec-tronics, engineering design and illustration, floral design, food service, greenhouse management and landscaping, machine trades, modern printing, visual mer-chandising and welding.

Evening vocational classes for adults desiring to complete high school requirements are avail-able through individual district community education offices. A summer school is also offered in selected subjects.

The center is one of four voca-tional centers administered by Oakland Intermediate Schools. Others are in Royal Oak (south-east), Pontiac (northeast) and Clarkston (northwest).

SWOVEC is operated by Walled Lake Schools with a half-mill of Oakland County tax money first approved in 1967. The center opened in 1971.

In her nine years, she's encountered just about every incident possible. When she first began her career, there wasn't any training in how to handle people in emergencies over the telephone.

IN THOSE days, becoming a dispatcher wasn't a career job. Because of the stress and changing bours, there was a lot of turnover. But Green learned by doing. Talking by phone with people who are often very upset is quite different than doing the same thing faceto-face.

"You may forget something very vital, but you'll never do it again, Green said." A lot of it is common sense. If there's a robbery in proof sense, if there's a family light, you try out a cold person and I'm really post. I'm sympathetic. But you four just a cold person and I'm really post. I'm sympathetic. But you four in time. He has to go by the information specific in the caller is critical, be also utels to keep the caller on the phone until police arrive. "You are an officer's illetine at that point in time. He has to go by the information you are giving him," she said.

As dispatch coordinator, a promotion she received in 1934, Green handles staff scheduling, serves as shift leader and as an assistant to her supervisor, Sgt. Joseph Rebh, communications division commander.
