McDonald eyes prosecutor run

"You can do so much good in that position," he said. "I had the opportunity to spend 2 1/2 years as a circuit court trial attorney, and I always enjoyed it."

"You're usually on the right side of the law," he added, noting that after striking out on his own, he did a lot of criminal defense work.

Since then, McDonald's law practice is more general in scope: real estate, divorce, estate, personal injury.

McDonald realizes he could earn more money in private practice. He also knows if he runs for prosecutor this year, he couldn't run again for the county commission.
"That's why it's such a big decision," he said. "I don't want to jump into it unless I know exactly what's going on (with Patterson). I can't run for both positions."
"It's a choice I'll have to make."
The filing deadline for all county elective seats is May 31.

BECOMING IMMUNE TO DRUGS

If you have been taking the same arthritis medication for months or years, you may be concerned that you could become "immune" to it. That is, the arthritic process will develop ways to circumvent the drug, rendering the medicine ineffective. Therefore, even if a drug is working for you now, it may be in your interest to have your doctor change medications.
That type of drug resistance rarely happens in arthritis. When joint pain increases over time, the cause is either from joint damage that has accumulated over the years, or, that the inflammatory activity of the arthritis is increasing in intensity.
Instead of changing drugs, your physician may give you more of the same one. The reason is that a new arthritis drug often brings with it side effects such as nausea, stomach pain, or headache. It is better to continue with modification of medicines that have worked in the past rather than to abandon them. When a therapy stops working, the likely cause is a change in your condition, rather than a failure of your medication.
