Care in kite-flying could save your life

The next time someone tells you to "go fly a kite," remember a few words of advice:

"It is better to lose a kite than a life," says John Keller, public safety coordinator for Detroit Edison.

"Kids don't always take the time to find safe, open areas away from power lines to fly their kites. We at Detroit Edison urge you to take the time."

Detroit Edison offers the following safety tips:

- Select a good, level, open space. Wires, poles, trees, large stones, ruts and ditches can cause injury.
- If a kite becomes lodged in a high tree, utility pole or wires, don't try to get it down. If kites or other objects are caught on Detroit Edison's poles or utility wires, please inform us of the location and circumstances.
- Don't fly kites in threatening weather. Lightning is electricity

- and wet string conducts electricity.
- Use light-weight wood for kite frames. Nails or pins left exposed may cause injury to arms or hands.
- Use stout, dry cord for your best kite string. Don't use kites containing wire or metal parts. Wire or metal would serve as a conductor if it came in contact with electrical equipment or wires.
- Handle kites alertly to prevent being thrown off-balance by a sudden gust or high wind. This also

- can cause burns as the cord slips through the hands.
- Avoid areas used by moving vehicles, such as streets, highways and railroad rights-of-way.
- Don't fly kites from rooftops or other elevated structures unless they are protected by enclosures high enough to prevent a fall.
- In raising or lowering a kite, always keep the cord compactly coiled so no one can trip over it.

Men, if you're about to turn 18, it's time to register with Selective Service at any U.S. Post Office.

It's quick. It's easy. And it's the law.
