The dream of running your own business and being your own boss is still alive for many people.

"Small businesses, innovative new businesses, service businesses, seem to be the wave of the future," says Richard J. Allen, business ombuds-man from the state Department of Commerce.

Speaking as a guest on the cable television program, "The Job Show," Allen cautions that the actual process of starting a small business can involve a great deal of paperwork.

Owning and operating a service station, for instance, involves comstation, for instance, involves com-plying with single business and transportation taxes, and the state's transportation taxes, and the states unemployment compensation, worker's compensation and occupational safety and health laws.
