

News show adds teleprompters

Tri-Outlet News is elevated to a more professional level. Teleprompters have been added to the studio cameras. This delicate fixture is installed on the front of cameras 1 and 3.

A typed page of news is fed into an overhead projector type of apparatus and the image is carried through to the camera lens and magnified on a mirrored screen right below the lens of the camera. Our talent is able to see more clearly the script of a news story.

Writers of Tri-Outlet News, call editor Todd Whitman, 473-7266, or Sen Dumm, 553-7303, to receive the instructions for format to type news for Tri-Outlet.

Census bureau job details

A profile of the nation. That's how Dwight Dean, regional manager, U.S. Bureau of the Census, describes the national census.

According to Dean, painting this portrait of the nation's population will require 12,000 workers in Michigan when the census is taken in 1990.

In addition, 1,000 temporary positions will be available in various parts of the state during the next 16 months, as the government tries to assemble the most accurate mailing list possible.

Dean appears on the weekly Metrovision cable television program "The Job Show" at 6:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 4.

The Census Bureau will soon begin hiring personnel to help compile residential addresses, the first stage of census preparation. For a few months this fall, 700 people in rural regions of the southern half of the Lower Peninsula and selected cities in the north will be needed to work as enumerators. These jobs will pay from $5.50 to $6.25 an hour, plus mileage.

About 1,000 people will be needed to work from the spring of 1989 to the fall of 1990, doing similar work, primarily in cities.

Teacher's boat hits reef off Fiji islands; he's OK

By Tom Beer
staff writer

A reef meant grief in the South Pacific last week for Rochester's Paul Marti, the geography teacher who was living his dream by circumnavigating the Earth in a sailing craft.

Marti and his wife, Betsy, were reported uninjured — but terribly disheartened — after their 31-foot Cape Dory cutter rig named Keema struck a coral reef and sank as it approached Suva in the Fiji Islands July 23.

Marti's journal and photographs of the trip had become a regular feature of the Observer & Eccentric's Street Scene section. He'd mail the words and photos to the newspaper.

"They called us last Friday, that's Saturday there," said Judy McWhirter, a friend and fellow teacher at Rochester High School. "They're both fine, but very depressed," she continued. "Paul said, 'We'll just have to go forward with our lives together from here.'"

"My husband and I were supposed to leave Thursday for Fiji to meet them, but they're flying home now. They should be home by Friday."

McWhirter said the Marti told her that the craft became snared on the coral reef. They stayed aboard most of the night, but had to abandon it and head for shore in a raft the following morning.

Marti returned with a salvage crew, which tried to save the $75,000 Keema. But it sank after being freed from the coral.

"They had taken most of their clothing with them on the raft and they managed to get some of the electronic gear off," McWhirter said, "but that's all. The rest was lost."

Now, with his boat gone, the Marti's situation is uncertain, McWhirter said. "They said they'd probably stay with their parents," she said.

HIS LATEST dispatch to Street Scene, carried in the July 18 issue, described Easter Island in the Pacific. A color photograph showed a bearded Paul Marti standing by one of the giant stone statues which dot the island.

His sailing journey started in June 1987 when Keema set sail from Metropolitan Beach, downbound on Lake St. Clair toward the Atlantic Ocean. Just over a year later — and a bit less than halfway around the world — it ended on a jagged piece of coral in the Pacific.
