Clinic for healing faster

In 1986 he authored a book for youngsters called "Growing Up Strong." While much of the book concerns physical fitness and good nutrition, the underlying theme is that the mind is the body's biggest muscle.

"It's your brain that tells your muscles what to do. It's your brain that decides to shape up," Nielsen said. "You have to set goals for yourself. It's your mind, not your body that does that."

MOST OF Nielsen's clients come to the clinic through a doctor's referral, immediately out of the hospital to get the rehabilitation under way as quickly as possible. Clients are treated by the therapists in close cooperation with the doctor.

Chronic illnesses, such as arthritis, are also treated in the clinic, as well as any chronic problem or injury affecting the musculo-skeletal system.

"The high-tech computerized electronics (at the clinic) deliver accurate and reliable data," Nielsen said.

As for evaluation, Nielsen's program offers color graphs for biofeedback, easy-to-read data printouts and test-to-test comparison progress reports.

Nielsen researched clinics across the country to bring the best of them all together in Farmington, he said. "I like life in the suburbs," he said. "I just bought a house in Farmington Hills so I'm here to stay."

Community Center gets funds from TAAG

The Arts Alliance Group will make monetary contributions to Detroit-area organizations that support the arts in Michigan. Their donations are aimed at arts supporters in the northwestern suburbs of Detroit.

Among the recipients are the Livonia Symphony Orchestra and the Farmington Community Center. TAAG considers these organizations worthy of support because they are non-profits that promote as well as support the visual and performing arts.

The Arts Alliance Group was formed in 1985 and is composed of area civic and business leaders.

Their goal is to provide publicity and financial support to other arts organizations.

"There is a growing need to promote and enhance these organizations and to encourage more people to become involved in the arts," said Kenneth Kelsey, owner of Kelsey Advertising and chairman of TAAG. "We want to make it easier for everyone to participate in cultural arts events. Then, as a society, we all benefit."

For more information on the activities of The Arts Alliance Group, call Ida Krandle at 851-4524.
