

Under the big top

It was the perfect day for Farmington Nursing Home's end-of-the-summer picnic when residents, their families and friends filled the shaded lawns for circus entertainment, banners, foods, games, contests, and carnival prizes. Above at left, "Bubbles the Clown" watched the goings-on with Norma Raetz and Clara Raetz. Below at left are the four generations of Julia Prager, a resident of the home. Her son is Allen Prager, her granddaughter is Cheryl Oblinger, a nurse at the home, and her great granddaughter is Cara Oblinger. The annual event is a joint effort between the staff, residents' relatives and volunteers at the home.

Senior chef

Gerald Barber, 98, a former Farmington resident and a member of West Bloomfield Nursing and Convalescent Center's Lunchtime Cooking Club, mixes up the vegetable dip for lunch. The club's members are those who miss their own kitchens and pool their culinary knowledge to prepare a lunch once a month for themselves and a few special guests.

Artists change date, place for fall show

Farmington Artists Club has pushed up the change and switched the location for its annual fall exhibit.

Show hours are from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, Oct. 29, and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 30 in Nardin Park United Methodist Church, on 11 Mile Road, west of Middlebelt.

Member Salwa Zarou has chosen Sari Khouri, professor of art at Michigan State University, to be the juror for the show.

Other than that, tradition remains with about 200 paintings that will be on display, and another 200 that will be in the unframed budget-priced section.

Member-artists donate their original works for the raffle that supports The Picture Lady program for art enrichment in the elementary schools and painting classes for seniors.

Admission is free and refreshments are complimentary.

Botsford teaches future of osteopathic medicine

A philosophy based on the interdependence of body systems is the foundation for osteopathic medicine and at Botsford General Hospital that philosophy is being taught every day.

Botsford serves as a primary teaching facility for the Michigan State University College of Osteopathic Medicine. Each year 30 interns and 60 plus residents train in 16 specialties and subspecialties.

"We help osteopathic medical students understand how to apply what they have learned to the patient," said Dr. Vance Powell, director of medical education of the hospital. "Because we are an osteopathic hospital, we emphasize a holistic approach to medicine."

Currently, 25,000 osteopathic physicians are serving communities in the United States.

Delicate balance is needed for 2-career couples

Glenn Whitelaw, who specializes in the issues that dual-career couples face on a daily basis, will lead a workshop that leads to discussion of these issues at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 4, in First Presbyterian Church of Farmington.

"The dramatic increase in dual-career families has evolved in the last 20 years and is a relatively new phenomena," Whitelaw said. "Due to the pioneering nature of this movement there is a lack of knowledge, role models and shared experiences."

In the United States today more than 50 percent of the families with two parents in the home have both parents working. Sixty eight percent of the women who have children after the age of 30 and 63 percent of women with college degrees return to the work force soon after the birth of their children.

Projections are that these percentages will continue to increase.

"It is a highly complex form of family life that has built into it an inherent quality of stress," Whitelaw says, who lived through it all with his employed-wife Sandy and their two children. "While there are many satisfactions, there are also many potential problems that can arise in the efforts to meet and coordinate what often seems like conflicting priorities."

Goal of the seminar, he says, "is to validate and normalize the experience of the dual-career families. What is needed is a delicate balance."

Whitelaw is a Southfield resident, is a therapist with offices in Southfield, and a member of First Presbyterian Church of Farmington.

There is no charge for the seminar, but reservations are required by calling the church, 474-6170.

Florists contribute to Festival of Trees

Country Flowers and Gifts, Schroeters Flowers and Goldballoon have all donated their creative talents by decorating a tree for this year's Festival of Trees fantasyland.

The three Farmington Hills-based holiday tree designers are eligible for one of 10 Festival Design Awards, which will be announced at the preview party Tuesday, Nov. 22.

Festival of Trees is an annual benefit for Children's Hospital of Michigan and will be open daily Nov. 22-28 in Cobo Hall.

Poet's work is published

Two poems by Kathleen McDowell have been published in the American Poetry Anthology, a treasury of present day poetry. The Farmington Hills resident's poems are titled "A Christmas Prayer" and "Windows." The poems were selected for the sections called "Christmas" and "True Recognition of Love."

The published poems are selected through a contest sponsored by the American Poetry Association which seeks to discover and encourage poets.

McDowell has been writing for about three years and says she gets her ideas from strength found in inner feelings and positive thinking.

Poets interested in publication are invited to send up to five poems, no more than 20 lines each, with name and address on each page, to American Poetry Association Dept. CN-68, P. O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, Calif. 95061.

The poetry association awards $11,000 in prizes to 152 winners. Free copies of "The Poet's Guide to

Kathleen McDowell

Getting Published" are given to all poets who send poetry.
