Headache relief is on the way

Research on headaches, a chronic malady suffered by 40-50 million Americans every year, is not a priority in the United States. And the research that is taking place is suffering on two fronts: a minuscule amount of money allocated by the National Institute of Health and no animal model for experiments.

Mice are of no help at all. Scientists are not even sure if any animal has headaches.

But Dr. Joel Saper, director of the Michigan Headache and Neurological Institute in Ann Arbor, holds out hope.

"FREEDOM FROM Headaches" is the title of his talk at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 25, in the Farmington Hills Branch Library, 32737 12 Mile.

Saper will talk about the different types of headaches and the multiple triggers that have been identified to cause the pain. He will explain why adult women have more headaches than men and tell of the latest breakthroughs in headache treatments.

Saper is considered one of the nation's leading experts on headache research and treatment, and is the author of five books on the subject.

His most recent is "Help for Headaches," published by Warner Books and reviewed in Newsweek as a "paperback that delivered more pain-relieving advice per dollar than any other" book of its kind.

SAPER BECAME interested in head pain disorders while assistant professor of neurology at the University of Michigan. He left there in 1978 to develop the Michigan Headache and Neurological Institute, the first comprehensive headache treatment and research center in the world.

Within a year he developed the first inpatient headache unit, designed to serve patients with intractable headache pain. The unit has been awarded the first national accreditation ever given to a headache treatment facility in the United States.

There is no charge to attend Saper's program, but reservations are requested by calling the library, 553-0300.
