

Program honors 'Doc' Holladay

The "Salute to Doc Holladay" at 8 p.m. Friday will have jazz musicians and the Lafayette String Quartet on the same program. This unlikely combination will be part of the farewell concert in honor of Holladay, who is retiring from the university's department of music, theater and dance where he is director of jazz studies.

The program at Varner Recital Hall will open with extemporaneous compositions by the performers including Holladay and will continue with music by Cole Porter, Duke Ellington, Billy Strayhorn and Haye/Depaul.

The farewell selection by Holladay will include the performance by the Lafayette String Quartet with string bassist Richard Davis and percussionist Warren Smith.

Holladay, a Ypsilanti resident, established his reputation as a composer and master of the baritone saxophone over the past four decades. He has recorded and performed with many well-known artists such as Ella Fitzgerald, Billy Eckstine, Herbie Hancock, Bill Evans, Tito Puente and Dizzy Gillespie. His new album, "Wings for the Spirit," is now available.

He is retiring to do more performing.

Tickets are $10 general admission; $5 for senior citizens, students and children; and $4 for OU students.

Davis and Smith will give a free lecture, "Blacks in Professional Music" from 3-4:30 p.m. Friday in Room 110 Varner Hall. Davis is on the University of Wisconsin faculty and Smith is a performer from New York City. For information, call the Center for the Arts box office, 370-3013.

Water line will end drought

By Wayne Paul
staff writer

Sewer lines stretching from eastern Oakland County to western Wayne County could eliminate water bans during future hot, dry summers, a Detroit Water and Sewerage Department official said Thursday.

But that is strictly in the future. Bans on lawn watering and other water restrictions could return if next summer is as parched as summer 1988.

LOW WATER pressure forced water restrictions in Livonia, Redford Township and Westland last summer, when rain was scarce and 100 degree temperatures plentiful.

A new water line, stretching across Troy, Bloomfield Township and eventually heading south toward western Wayne, will permanently increase pressure in the area, reducing the need for future restrictions, said A.C. Davanzo, assistant director of operations for the Detroit system.

That line, however, is at least three years away. Until then, residents in western Wayne County and other low pressure areas may continue to face water bans.

State health department officials have notified the Detroit Water system they would seek restrictions, possibly an areawide water-use ban, if last summer's conditions return.

The Detroit system, Davanzo said, is opposed to widespread water-use bans.

"Cutting water use in Grosse Pointe won't get water to Novi," Davanzo said. "The problem is a lack of water mains."

Toward that end, the system will soon be laying lines in both Oakland and Wayne counties.

The new Oakland County main would extend down Adams Road in Troy and east/west across Bloomfield Township before heading south.

"WE'VE GOT all the property we need, except for a piece near Franklin Village," Davanzo said.

Work has already begun on a western Wayne line that will eventually extend from the Joy/Napier area of western Plymouth Township south to the Napier/Cherry Hill section of western Canton Township.

Western Wayne's water pressure problems, Davanzo said, are caused by the area pump station at Telegraph and Eight Mile. That station, known as the west service center, diverts water northward to Oakland County, simultaneously reducing pressure levels in western Wayne.

"Communities in western Wayne aren't getting as much pressure as they should," Davanzo said.

Davanzo discussed water issues before the Southeast Michigan Council of Governments last Thursday. SEMCOG is an intergovernmental agency representing communities in Wayne, Oakland, Macomb, Livingston, Monroe, St. Clair and Washtenaw counties.

shouldn't be considered the river's major polluter.

"Undoubtedly, there will be something that will require more action than we're doing now. At some point, we're going to have to look at off-line (waste) storage," he said. "But one of the ways it's not going to be solved is to beat up on Detroit."

Davanzo told listeners he had a personal interest in the river's cleanup.

"I'm one of only a few people who've canoeed the Rouge, fell in and survived," he said.
