

OU acquires baroque instrument collection

Oakland University recently purchased the Huggett Family Historical Instrument Collection. Lyle Nordstrom, professor in the university's department of music, theater and dance, said the acquisition of the collection is a coup which will enhance the reputation of the department as the only in undergraduate training in the field of early music.

Recording artists use authentic period instruments or reproductions and students who train on them in college will have a marked advantage when they become professionals.

Included in the collection are two baroque violins by Brian Maynard; a baroque viola by Maynard; a baroque viola by John Pringle; a violone by Harry Williams; two baroque flutes by Ackermann; a baroque oboe by Andreas Glat; and a set of four Renaissance recorders by Klaus Schelle. The Huggett family, living north of Toronto, used the instruments when performing as a troupe throughout North America.

Nordstrom said there was widespread interest in the instruments from collectors and other universities. Oakland University purchased them with gifts from the campaign for Oakland University, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Center for the Arts and private individuals.

Nordstrom said, "When combined with the baroque instruments already in Oakland's collection, the Huggett instruments establish the essential core for a baroque orchestra, awaiting only the acquisition, at some later time, of more violins, an early cello, a new harpsichord and a chamber organ."

The inaugural concert for the instruments will Friday, Feb. 17, when the Oakland Choral performs Handel's "Acis and Galatea."

Caruso statue to be unveiled

The Verdi Opera Theater of Michigan will place a life-size statue of Enrico Caruso in the Orchestra Hall lobby, to be unveiled Saturday, Jan. 21.

The ceremony will precede a concert by tenor Carlo Bergonzi. After the concert, Bergonzi will be presented with the first Enrico Caruso Award, a 12-inch reproduction of the statue. The award will be given annually to musicians whose activities foster the growth of opera in Michigan.

Contributors to the Statue of Enrico Caruso Society's fund will have their names engraved on the base. Donations should be sent to Statue of Enrico Caruso Society, c/o Dino Valle, 8797 Parkway, Dearborn 48127. For tickets to the unveiling, call the Orchestra Hall box office, 833-3700.

The statue was done by Fernec Varga. The list of honorary chairmen is headed by Gov. James Blanchard and Frank Stella.
