

Chamberworks finds treasures

By Avigdor Zaromp

Vivaldi is recognized, to a great extent, as the composer of the "Four Seasons." This set of four concerti is, indeed, his most often performed music. Like Napoleon and Waterloo, it is the association that comes to mind first, but it doesn't necessarily spell glory. Even among those who appreciate some of Vivaldi's music, few are up to an entire program of it. The exception was presented by Chamberworks, under the direction of Thomas Kurus with his encyclopedic knowledge.

Frequently, I find myself disdaining much of Vivaldi's music. Its tendency to flip flop between tonic and dominant with little else or to move up and down the scale in an endless chain of imitative patterns is boring.

It is often said that he wrote the same concerto 500 times.

Vivaldi did in fact write hundreds of concerti for a variety of instruments, yet few people are familiar with hundreds of Vivaldi's works. Even professional musicians have heard only a handful of this vast repertoire. With diligent digging, one may occasionally come up with some treasures.

LIKE THE FISH COMMERCIAL, that says it doesn't taste or smell like fish, I appreciate most those that don't sound like Vivaldi, or at least use the patterns more sparingly.

Such treasures were among the items on the Chamberworks program. The entire program, with the exception of the opening movement from a concerto for flute, oboe, violin and cello, consisted of little known works. Some did possess the familiar fishy flavor, such as the Concerto for Flute, Violin and Basso Continuo, RV 84, but beneath were some pearls. These were provided by flutist Carol Perkins, who joined regular members violinist Maria Smith and cellist Paul Willington, with Kurus at the harpsichord.

The item with the least amount of fishy flavor was the Sonata in C Minor for Cello and Basso Continuo, RV 53. Oboist Mark DuBois presented this rare work with authority and brilliance. It features some refined and inspired forms that I wish Vivaldi had used more often. Another work with low fish content was the Sonata in F Major for Cello and Basso Continuo, which gave Paul Willington the opportunity to shine with some highly lyrical cello phrases.

ANOTHER HIGHLIGHT was an arrangement by Bach of a G major concerto for harpsichord. Beneath the characteristic Vivaldi style one could sense the refined touch of the master.

The program commanded continuous attention in spite of lasting almost three hours, including intermission.

The demand for Chamberworks programs with their intimate surroundings is such that the limited space at the Bellan Center is always sold out. A repeat performance of this program was also sold out. The switch to a larger hall may compromise the unique spirit of the series, but the growing demand for tickets may prove increasingly difficult to resist.
