

Students win

Three Farmington Hills Harrison High students from Margaret Culver's social studies class have won state awards in the Michigan Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution Contest. Awards were presented in Lansing on May 25. Shown with Culver are Kieran Collins (left), who won a third place; Heather Tucker, who won a second place; and Dawn Brasler, who won first place honors. These students also won a special state award this year for a Michigan Student Film and Video Festival video titled "The AIDS Quiz."

Range under fire

Farmington Hills, Farmington and federal agencies, such as the Drug Enforcement Administration and Secret Service, have long used the range to practice firing shotguns and automatic assault weapons, such as the AR-15. The outdoor range also is used to practice barricade shooting as well as crowd control with simulated tear gas.

Farmington and Farmington Hills have indoor firing ranges where officers can practice and qualify with handguns. "There are some things that can't be done indoors," Dwyer said.

Police qualify twice a year, once at the indoor range and once at the outdoor range.

The YMCA is studying possible development of the soon-to-be vacated land. "Presently, we're working with businesses and residents to hopefully develop that property, to find an appropriate use for it," YMCA executive director Kevin Bush said.

"It is crucial to keep police officers properly trained. It affects our liability," Dwyer said.
