Scandinavian scores with guest Lee

One reason to attend the Scandinavian Symphony Orchestra concerts is to hear music from those countries not always played in the mainstream of classical music.

Last Saturday evening guest conductor Dai Uk Lee led the orchestra in a particular beautiful "Pastoral Suite" by Lars-Erik Larsson. Program notes become important, especially in learning that Larsson was trained by Alban Berg.

The love "Pastoral Suite," performed with understanding and expression by the orchestra, was fresh with an uncomplicated appeal. It was clean and organized with the beauty of work coming out of its technical qualities and the development of the musical ideas not in any overdrawn emotionalism.

THE SCANDINAVIAN Symphony is lead by principal guest conductor

Mary Jane Doerr

Matthew Hazelwood but for this concert, Dai Uk Lee, of the music faculty of Michigan State University, brought with him a doctoral student, Geoffrey Day (whose name was spelled two ways in the program).

Day was supposed to perform the Bruch "Violin Concerto Op. 28" but made a satisfactory switch to Mozart's "Violin Concerto No. 5."

From the first notes of the concerto, one is immediately struck by the sweet sound of Day's violin, a sound he is able to carry throughout his cadenzas, trills and double stops. His is a serene approach to the music with directed interpretation of the ideas.

The third movement was by far the most interesting between the violinist and the orchestra. It was more spirited with a lift and more interaction.

DEFINITELY THE Tchaikovsky "Symphony No. 2 in C Minor" was the focus work of the evening. The orchestra seemed to have a sense of direction and movement. The instrumentalists gave an understanding feeling to the work and made it stand out.

The horn and bassoon work in the opening movements, which one must assume were performed by the principals Nielsen Dalley and Walter Dean, are worth noting.

Lee is a conductor with precision and accuracy. He has definite ideas. He studied with the outstanding Scandinavian-raised, American-born Herbert Blomstedt (who was a conductor for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra position and is conducting the San Francisco Symphony) is markedly shown in Lee's explicit conducting style.

The first movement is, of course, the most recognized in this work which is nicknamed the "Little Russian" symphony because of its association with the Ukraine.

HERE, LEE brought the orchestra to full volume repeatedly to its final climax, shading the interpretation throughout the movement.

Lee is a conductor worth noting. In Detroit, he is the choir director for the Korean Presbyterian Church and has guest conducted the Dearborn Symphony. In East Lansing, he conducts the MSU Symphony Orchestra and the MSU Opera Theater.
