What bowlers ask from Santa Claus:

HAT YOU'LL FIND on every bowlers' Christmas wish list.

• That my ball will find its way to the pocket more of-

That the 10 pin will topple then I hit the strike target.
That I can string out more than two strikes in a row.

That the splits will avoid me,

That the splits will avoid even the baby ones.
That the opponents will get all

• That I will not miss the easy

That I will not miss the easy spare when the game is on the line.
That the blister will not appear on my thumb.
That my shoes will not stick on the approach after a trip to the washroom

That I will not get stuck with

That my 16-pound ball doesn't feel like it weighs 32 pounds by the 'third game.

That I keep the ball between the channels.

the channels.

That I can go through a season without losing more than six bowling towels.

That some of those Brooklyn hits will carry for strikes.

How about it, Santa? Please fill my stocking with some of these requests!

Jennifer Shasky hasn't experienced an "all-Nighter" yet at George Washington University, but the George Washington University, but with this being finals week, she is prepared for one.

"I was up "ill 3:30 last night (Monday) studying for my '01d Testament' exam." said Shasky, a freshman basketball player from Birmingham Marian. "That's an 'All-Nighter' for me. My brain is pretty fried right now."

So far, academics have been agreater challenge for Shasky, aftine addition to the Colonials' women's basketball team. Shasky, last year has been hamed the Allantle 10 Conference's Robeic of the Week. That's quite an honor, considering the season is less than a month old.

A starter at small forward, Shasky is averaging 14.6 points, 2.8 rebounds and 1.8 steals per game for the 4-1 Colonials. She is making 8 percent of her 3-point field goals (12 of 25) and is shooting 43 percent overall from the field.

Shasky hasn't let George Wash-ington down, but at the start of the season, she and many of her learn-mates felt betrayed by last year's coaching staff. In August, days before school be-gan, head coach Jennifer Bednarek gan, head coach Jennifer Bednarek announced her resignation. Not long after, both assistant coaches — including former Bloomfield Hills Andover cager Lisa Zodiner, who recruited Shasky — decided to take jobs elsewhere.

The vacancies weren't filled until late September, when Joe McKewom was named head coach. Practice began Oct. 15, so preseason conditioning was up to the players.

"IN SOME WAYS, it worked out for the best," Shasky sald. "The whole situation — with the coach leaving — brought us together as a team. We were responsible for conditioning ourselves in the present on without a coach. Our only senior (leading scorer and point guard Karin Vadelund) took over and we did the kind of conditioning they did in the naxi.

did the kind of conditioning they did in the past.

"We had to be in condition and it wasn't like we were going to say no. It didn't seem so much like a chore, because we wanted to dit. Shasky admits transferring initially "crossed my mind, but I never seriously considered it." She decided to stay because of George Washington's respected academic standing and because of McKeown—who earned her immediate respect.

"He was very understanding about the fact that he's the new coach — and for some of the players he's their third coach here in three years. 'Shasky said. "I was a little unsure at first, but he wasn't looking to come in and get a whole new system. The whole staff is great. He's a good guy and a good coach. coach. He received a lot of respect from the moment he got here."

Because of George Washington's high eadernie standards, a coach-ing change isn't the only thing she had to adjust to. She compares bas-ketball to her coursework because each have similar demands.

"IN BASKETBALL, I feel like I "IN BASKETBALL, I feel like I have to catch up because with me being a freshman and starting I don't know all the little things they (my teammates) know," she said. "They know the tricks of the trade. The same thing goes with school. I don't know what to expect on the finals or mid-terms. Classes are going well. I just have to study real long for them."

Shasky doesn't stay up all night worrying about that.

"We don't mind (being picked sixth), because it's hard being sixth), because it's hard being picked first or second and living up to it," she sald. "We'll take it one game at a time and our goal is to win the Atlantic 10. If we keep improving, I think we can."

For an instant, those kind of thoughts must have flashed through the minds of St. Mary's basketball coaches and the fans who followed them to Ypsilanti Wednesday night, to watch the Eagles tackle NCAA Division I Eastern Michigan University.

It was nearly midway through the first half, and St. Mary's had just completed an 8-0 run that tied the game at 13. There was still more than 30% minutes of basketbail to play, of course. But still.

Those dreams were quickly dashed in the next four minutes. The Hurons outscored St. Mary's 18-2 in that stretch to build a 31-15 lead. By halffume, the home team was confortably ahead 48-33 — and that was as close as the Eagles would get, succumbing 111-74.

The dominance was evident everywhere except rebounding. St. Mary's outboarded EMU 50-47, with James Lakes leading the way with 10. Lakes also scored 10 points before fouling out with 7:32 left.

The Hurons, though, bit 566 percent of their shots to St. Mary's 35.8 percent. The Eagles also committed 31 curnovers to EMU's 15.
