

Yvonne and Sandy Brotherton share a special moment in the public spotlight.

Yvonne Brotherton remembered as loving

Carolyn Yvonne Brotherton, known to family and friends as Yvonne, died Dec. 15, a few days after her 62nd birthday, in University Hospital, Ann Arbor. She was diagnosed as having throat cancer in November. She is survived by her husband, Wilbur "Sandy" Brotherton, former Farmington mayor and state representative for the 69th District from 1974 to 1988; two children, Bill and Karen Lynn, both of Farmington Hills; and seven brothers and sisters. Services were held Wednesday in Heene-Sundquist Funeral Home, Farmington. The Rev. Kean Cronin celebrated a Mass at Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church, Farmington. Burial was in Oakwood Cemetery, Farmington. "She loved her family, her home, interior decorating, and she loved to read," Brotherton said of his wife. "She wasn't a joiner."

One of the exceptions to this was her work in getting the Bel Air Civic Association formed when the family moved to Farmington in 1955. Much more recently, she joined as one of the Eucharistic ministers at Our Lady of Sorrows Church. Brotherton described his first year of retirement as one of "running around either to dentists or doctors." "It would have been a lot more fun if she had been well," he said.

Year 2000 printing fee to be shared

Farmington Hills will delay some computer equipment purchases to help fund the printing of the long-awaited Year 2000 Committee's final report. Meanwhile, the city's Economic Development Corporation will pay about half of the newly revised printing cost of $32,000, which is for 10,000 copies of the 60-page report. That's the gist of city council action Monday night. On Dec. 12, the EDC decided its economic development parameters would allow it to share the cost of the report with the city. The EDC can use the report as a marketing tool to bring businesses, and an expanded tax base, to the city, said City Manager William Costick, an EDC member. The city will defer some budgeted acquisitions for computer-related equipment to come up with its share, about $14,500. Purchase of that equipment isn't urgent, Costick said. On Dec. 4, the city council, concerned about the original $45,000 price tag and the lack of a distribution plan, told Costick to prepare a distribution plan for the report and to ask the EDC to use its $10,000 contribution toward printing. THE YEAR 2000 report will provide a blueprint for the quality of life that residents desire in the 1990s. A 15-member steering committee has overseen 150 volunteers working on six task forces: financial and economic vitality; beautification and environmental preservation; public facilities and services; human services; leisure and cultural activities; and public safety.

Kim Kraft Printers of Livonia, lowest of four bidders, will print the 60-page report, complete with color illustrations. Delivery to the city is expected by Dec. 20. On Jan. 8, the steering committee will present the report to the city council in a brief ceremony. A study session involving the two groups will be set up later, said David Call, assistant city manager. The distribution list includes Year 2000 committee members, EDC members, other city board and commission members, city employees, city residents, homeowner associations, houses of worship, major corporations, Farmington schools, the city of Farmington, Farmington Community Library, Botsford General Hospital, the chamber of commerce, the interagency council, county officials and neighboring towns.

The Year 2000 report will provide a blueprint for the quality of life that residents desire in the 1990s.
