

Early love of links turns into pro golf career

BEFORE THE Southfield job came up, the energetic, outgoing Anthony was leading a double life. During the school year, she coached the varsity girls basketball team at Redford Union High School.

During the golf season, she worked as an apprentice under head pro Gary Whitener at Whispering Willows in Livonia for five years, and under Ray Hale at Western Country Club in Redford. She also worked one year as head pro at Valley View Golf Course at Shepherd in northern Michigan. She gave up the coaching when she came to Southfield.

"Teaching is my favorite part of being a pro," she said. "I like it when somebody makes that good swing and they get all excited. I know they've reached one of their goals and I've reached a goal, too."

"I really like people. I'm a talker and a gabber. I like to walk around

(at the Southfield courses) and talk with people. And I get to meet new people every day."

ANTHONY TEACHES golf lessons to people of all ages. "There are great young people, great older people and great people in between."

When she was 18 and a freshman with a basketball scholarship at Saginaw Valley State University, Anthony fell during a practice session. "I got a neck and a back injury and was never able to play basketball again."

"I never got it out of my blood," she said. "That's why I turned to coaching. It also made some changes in me that helped me with teaching and coaching. Before the accident I was so competitive, my concentration level was so strong." That eased afterward.

Her commitment to succeeding in a career as a golf pro is at a strong level. She works seven days a week.

10 to 13 hours a day and often longer. In addition to her teaching clinics and classes at the two clubs, Anthony gives 40 to 50 private lessons a week.

"When things settle down," she said, "I plan to take Mondays off as a teaching day."

SHE AND her mother, Helen Anthony, who are partners in the Beech Woods and Evergreen pro shops, spent last winter getting the merchandise together. They offer a wide range of golf attire and equipment. "Anything you can think of, we have."

When she's not working, she roots for the Pistons and Red Wings, and enjoys cooking. I try and spend a lot of time with family and friends during the winter because there's not much time in the summer. Anthony lives with her family in Farmington Hills but is looking for a condo of her own.

She plays in golf tournaments whenever possible.

Keep Highmeadow — staff

But both school officials, parents and a representative of the teachers union said the pilot program had put a lot of pressure on the staff to make the program work, although all said they were pleased overall with the program.

Jim Miner, Farmington Education Association president, said he was "pleased with the tremendous investment made by the staff" but that some staff members had reported "depression," and "psychosomatic complaints."

"There was tremendous cost to the staff. I think the board should be fully apprised of that."

Those involved with introducing the program — parents, the school's principal, top administrators — concurred. "We had the staff on the fast track and it was wearing," said Judith White, assistant superintendent for curriculum and staff development.

"We have fought together, we have cried together. We have done about everything together to pull off," she added. "We have paid the consequences. In the future, I hope we give ourselves more time."

The Highmeadow program was proposed in early 1988, approved that spring and opened that fall in a building that had most recently served as a private high school.

Salvation Army cites volunteer

Bettye Holbert of Farmington Hills is among 12 men and women honored at the Civic Dinner of the Salvation Army of Metropolitan Detroit.

Holbert received an "Army of Stars" medal in honor of her spirit of volunteerism and community service.

Holbert has provided countless hours of service to the Farmington Hills community during the past 10 years through the Salvation Army. During this time, she has served others in need through the Army's food pantry program and other projects, including visiting shut-ins at convalescent and nursing homes and transporting neighborhood children to Sunday School. Salvation Army Lt. and Mrs. Jonathan Hich of Farmington Hills said: "We can always count on Bettye — no matter what the job entails."

Her other volunteer efforts are spent at Botsford General Hospital, and Duns Scotus where she spends some 30 hours a week helping with its food distribution program.

Porn case called entrapment

Hanna was on the telephone when the 16-year-old bought the magazines, Ingle said after the preliminary hearing. The attorney said Hanna didn't get an answer from police when he asked them about the magazines or one of their recent store inspections.

THE ASSISTANT prosecutor said the two counts against Hanna include an awareness or a "reckless disregard" of the teenager's age, and a knowledge or "reckless disregard" for the knowledge of the content of the magazines.

Defense attorney Ingle questioned the standards of whether such sexually explicit magazines are offensive or harmful to those younger than 17. "It has no proof whatsoever what the standard is for 17-year-olds. I think we need some form of proof."

Thomas told the court it is not community standards, but those of minors, on which such offenses are based. She said she had proved in her case against Hanna that such magazines are, for example, harmful to minors, as well as lacking in value for minors.

Ingle questioned Harris on why Hanna was charged with two counts of distributing obscene materials to a minor when the 16-year-old made only one transaction.

"Because it was a package deal. You get two of them," Harris responded.

The May 8 investigation was the police department's second undercover crackdown on the sale of pornography to minors. Police investigated three stores.

The first crackdown, June 8, 1989, resulted in charges against another party store owner, who is awaiting trial on similar charges. Plea-bargaining on the obscenity charges will not be accepted, Dwyer said.

The undercover crackdowns were prompted by the police department's citizens crime advisory committee, which expressed concern about the availability of pornography to minors in Farmington Hills.
