Gearopolis ($24.98), made of thick, durable plastic in bright colors, allows children to find out for themselves how gears work. The 80 pieces can be assembled many different ways and come with two "gearboats" for imaginative play.

Gift ideas for kids 6-10 ahead, moving cards on a board as they chart a path through a spooky maze toward specific goals.

MARMEI GIFTS and Toys in Farmington Hills carries a souped-up, fluorescent green and red version of that old standby, dominos. ($35) To play, children set up not only the dominos but helicopters, rocket launchers, elevators, robots and more. As the dominos fall, they set off these various items, which, in turn, topple more dominos.

Marmei also carries unusual games from a company called Aristoplay in Ann Arbor. Pollution Solution ($20) helps kids become more aware of environmental problems. Each player is in charge of a section of a township where pollution is rapidly spreading and must use solution cards to clean up his or her section.

Other Aristoplay games, many of which have won the prestigious Parents' Choice awards, teach kids about American history, classical mythology and composers. Several of them can also be found at the gift shop at the Detroit Institute of Arts.

Many stores are carrying an interesting line of mystery puzzles. Sweet Revenge and Double Cross are two — from a company called Be Puzzled. Designed for ages 11 through adult, they include a mystery story to read and a related puzzle to assemble. There is no picture of the finished puzzle to follow. And when you put together the puzzle, you solve the mystery. The puzzles range from $12 to $25.

If your child still wants something soft to cuddle, you might want to look into a new line of dolls at Hudson's. Club Kids ($20 each) is a group of soft, charming rag dolls — boys and girls, black, white and Oriental — with round, embroidered faces. They are 15 inches tall and come in many different styles.

KIDS CAN find lots of ways to express themselves through one of the many craft kits on the market. We especially liked the Creativity for Kids kits at Marmei.

Instead of providing the materials to make one or two specific things, as many kits do, these include a variety of materials organized around a theme plus lots of ideas for ways to use them. Because the kits are open ended, kids can make more in their own ideas and imagination.

Glow in the Dark Crafts ($17) for materials to create insects, sea creatures, planets and hot mar. Kids can also Fun With Nature ($16.95) to preserve flowers, make miniature landscapes, bookmarks and wind ornaments and collect shells and rocks.

The Rainbow Shop has several large craft kits, which also give kids lots of room to create. Children can decorate T-shirts, hats and shoes with Fashion Painting Party ($17.95) and make their own jewelry with the Jewelry Making Kit ($15.95).

And if you and your child are really ambitious, you can even buy a kit ($20) to stencil a glow in the dark water sky on the bedroom ceiling.

"This is a favorite even of college students," said Marie Melien, Marmei co-owner. "We're just amazed
