Communication needs for deaf and blind taught

Opportunities to learn the communications needs of the deaf and blind community are available in Madon-na College, Livonia. The first of a set of the control of the contro project.

Rust said students will be taught interpreting skills to communicate with this population which would include tactile communication. The workshops will also focus on the lo-cal, state and national services available to the deaf and blind.

available to the deaf and blind.
"Through this project, the Sign Language Studies Department is recognizing a sensitivity to all deaf and blind people and will help to increase services to this community." Rust said.

The project is made possible through the support of the Hilton. Perkins National Program of Perkins School for the Blind, Watertown, Mass. The program is funded by a grant from the Conrad N. Hilton Foundation of Los Angeles, Calif.

For information regarding these sorkshops, which may be taken for college credit, contact the Office of Sign Language Studies, 591-5131.
