

Ensemble maintains quality level

Avigdor Zaromp

Mozart was the principal composer on the latest Lyric Chamber Ensemble program, the second one this season dedicated to his memory. The two Mozart works featured were the Piano Quartet in E Flat Major, K. 493 and the Clarinet Quintet in A Major, K. 591. The celebrated Octet in E Flat Major by Mendelssohn capped this musically rich program.

High standards and capable artists are traditional with these programs. When these are combined with selections of top quality, the event becomes an experience that is seldom matched or surpassed.

Fedora Horowitz, pianist and artistic director of LCE, joined three DSO string players — violinist Emmanuelle Boissvert, violist Darryl Jeffers and cellist John Thurman — for a memorable and remarkable performance of Mozart's piano quartet. Horowitz resisted the temptation to feature the piano as overwhelmingly dominant instrument. Instead, the sense of balance between piano and strings was total and complete, of the kind that can be expected only from chamber groups of long standing. The piano runs in the fast movements, which were meticulously smooth and accurate, blended with the strings to produce a unified fabric of pure music.

Mozart's Clarinet Quintet, which enjoyed more regular exposure than the previous work, received one of its more inspired performances on this occasion. Theodore Olen, principal clarinet of the DSO, was joined by Boissvert, Applegate, Jeffers and Thurman for this enchanting, imaginative performance. While I have heard many good and competent performances of this work, only in a few of these were clarinet phrases as well shaped as in this performance. The variations in the final movement seemed to reveal successive new treasures even to those who heard them many times before.

Standard repertoire, depending on the circumstances, can develop the flavor of stale, old food, or — alternately — that of old fashioned but fresh, enticing dishes. These two Mozart works were unmistakably in the latter category.

Mendelssohn's Octet, while still receiving a competent performance, came through with less luster and brilliance than the Mozart works. The performance consisted of violinists Geoffrey Applegate, Leomere Sjoberg, Sharon Stanis and Marquette Deslippe, violists James van Valkenburg and Yvonne Schotten, cellists Marcy Chonkaux and Haden McKay. All are DSO musicians except for Stanis, who is from the Lafayette String Quartet and Schotten

The artistic communication between members of this group didn't seem as close as that in the smaller groups. Part of it may be due to insufficient rehearsal time. The first movement sounded like an overgrown string orchestra in need of a conductor, and the Scherzo sounded wet and soggy. Whatever was lacking in terms of balance and precision, however, was made up for with spirit and energy. Some of the missing ingredients turned up in the final movement, suggesting that more rehearsal time would have proved very beneficial.

A letter campaign is being waged to save the arts in Michigan from the budget ax. The Lyric Chamber Ensemble is worth every penny invested in it. Please write your state representatives.

Chamberworks performing

Chamberworks, a local ensemble specializing in early music, has a problem many groups would like to turn people away. Their next program, 8 p.m. Friday, March 15, is "Bach & Sons & Co." It will be held at Christ Church Cranbrook, in the Guild Hall or the main sanctuary, depending on the number of reservations. The musicians are, from left, Victoria Hallom, Mary Richards, Thomas M. Kuras and Paul Willington. For tickets and reservations, call 643-7788.
