

New cable television studio makes its debut

Amidst the wind and the rain of Wednesday evening, the new Television Studio for the cities of Farmington, Farmington Hills and Novi was introduced to our residents. The rooms were bursting with creative energy and smiling faces. The television equipment had arrived the day before, as did the studio curtains. The set of the television show "Let's Talk About It" hosting Patrick Harris was on display.

We tested the acoustics to its maximum with the supposed roaring storm outside, the lively music in the studio and quiet conversations going on in the green room and individual offices.

Everyone was totally undisturbed by the other activities. Frankly, we could not tell that a storm was going on outside. Soundproofing success.

BESIDES the respective city council members, judges, resident producers and crew, family and friends, and business owners, also in attendance were general manager of MetroVision Robert McCann, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Orleman, president of Midwestern Management Inc. and Frank Blüsky, our project manager of Midwestern Management Inc., as well as Leonard Siegel of Siegel/Tuomala Associates, our architectural firm for the Studio Project.

If you missed the open house, give us a call and stop by. We are very proud to bring you such an exciting community service.
