

Consent law eyed by schools

ing," she said. "We have had calls from parents concerned that we would weave this into a unit. That is not the case."

The state has issued suggested guidelines about how information is distributed. A 9-paragraph notice released by the state Department of Education explains to minors how to get a probate court waiver to bypass the parental consent law. The notice offers students the address and telephone number of the probate court serving the community in which they live.

School officials throughout the state say they are concerned about mandating the school districts to handle the matter, but most say they plan to comply. In neighboring Livonia, for example, the district is considering printing the information in its first newsletter to parents this fall. Plymouth-Canton Community Schools will mail the information to 35,000 homes in May.

IN THE Clarenceville School District, which educates students in the southeast corner of Farmington Hills, superintendent Jerry Monicillo has come out strongly against the law.

"It's another example of school districts being used as a dumping ground for social problems," he said. "We can't talk about abortion in the classroom, but now we have to get information on abortion out to students."

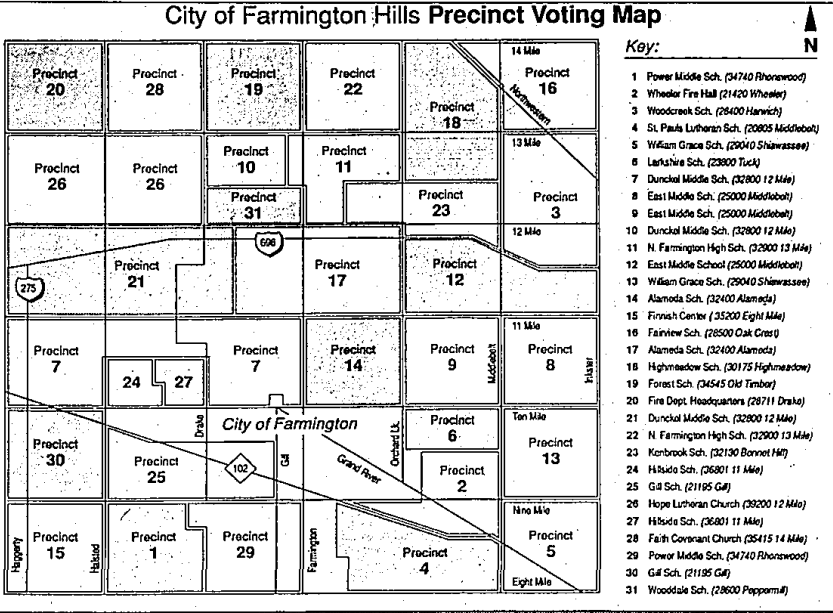

He said he preferred the state mail such information directly to the home and let parents handle the issue with children in their own way, instead of involving the schools.

Voters in 2 precincts switch to Hillside

Farmington Hills voters who used to vote at the city-owned San Marino Golf Course maintenance building, 26834 Halsted, will now vote at the new Hillside Elementary School, 35801 11 Mile, beginning with the parks and recreation tax vote Tuesday, May 7.

Voters in precincts 24 and 27 will now vote at the new elementary school. Only these two precincts have been relocated. The change does not affect other voters or precincts.

"The boundaries (of the two precincts) have not been changed," city clerk Kathy Dorman said.

Voters in precincts 24 and 27 have been notified of the change by mail. New voter registration cards, which already have been mailed, also note the location change. A sign also will be posted on the San Marino maintenance building door announcing the change, Dorman said. The city has 31 precincts. To determine at which precinct you must vote, refer to your voter registration card and the city's precinct map.

The polls will be open 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday, May 7.
