The workshops on cultural diversity at Mercy Center found our television staff most eager participants. The workshops were so interesting and thought-provoking that we found ourselves for several days after reflecting on bow it applies to our television facility. Most importantly, we'd like to share with you that in a television environment, who you are, what you are, how all you are, bow much money you make, doesn't matter at all. Once a person walks through tione studio doors, the environment is one of a team, where your skills and finante characteristics take pre-ordence.

When one is part of a television abow, the team is headed for specific goals that have been clarified by the producer. Each individual contributes to the success of this accom-

We all thought that on the subject of cultural diversity, a television format would be perfect to educate one another on how we are unusual in a creative way. Give some consideration to taking the four-resiston television workshop, which is free, with four or five of your comrades. To have a brochure sent to you, call-73-7266.
Remember, diversity is the key word which enhances our lives by bringing an opportunity to recognize that there are an infinite number of ways that we may choose to live.
