A Conversation Between Martha Washington and Dr. Anna Shaw. Martha Washington sat in the living room of the White House, sewing a button on George's shirt. She was disturbed by the servants announcing Dr. Anna Shaw.

The lady sat down and looked at dainty little Martha.

"Mrs. Washington, I would like you to join our woman's club, I also would like to have you join us in bringing about woman suffrage."

"I don't understand what you mean, George attends to all the political things you know, so I don't believe I care to enter into that sort of thing. George tells me women can't converse in such matters anyway."

"Don't worry, Mrs. Washington. The women will show him yet. We are not inferior to men in this day and age. We can hold offices and vote as well as any man."

"Why, Mrs. Shaw! woman's place is at home, looking after her children and obeying her husband. Oh! what are women coming to?"

"Mrs. Washington, I am here to tell you that women will always be inferior and afraid of worldly things if we don't show men we are able to exercise our mental ability as well as they. Any woman can raise children, cook and sew. Those are simple things. Do you want the women to always do simple things? Not I! Men can attend to worldly things and look after their families, so why can't women do it too?"

"It sounds alright, but I believe I shall remain a real lady and not make George think he married a half man. Please excuse me, as I hear him calling now."

Helen Westfall.

Freshmen

They had to stay after school nearly every night last week for Miss Doster. It is most likely they will get a fine department.

Sophomores

They are glad it remains cold, because they are working hard in history and they will not have to work so hard when it is hot.

Juniors

They have started to earn money for their trip to Washington next year.

Seniors

They are counting the days that they have to wait before they go to Washington.
