Bridging Over the Years
By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)
ARTHUR RIVINGTON got off the train at the little village and looked about him, trying to feel at home. But he couldn't. There were the same houses. Among the people on the street he now and then saw a face which looked familiar to him; but he could not fit a name to its owner. He was surprised at the feeling of strangeness he had in the home of his boyhood. As a matter of fact the village had altered very little—the change was in Arthur.
He had been away for ten years—South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, the South Sea Islands. He had been a youth, twenty-five, when he set out—he was returning a bronzed and rather prematurely worn man of thirty-five. But he was bringing his shaves with him in the shape of a competence, amassed by means of a trading schooner. The active, strenuous productive years of his life had been passed amid surroundings and under conditions which were entirely new to him. He had been sure of it, was a part of himself.
“But I am a young man yet,” he thought, “and can soon set myself to the key of the remembrance of home. It is only a matter of time.” There it was, you see—there was a woman in the case. And ten years is a long time to kiss a girl to wait. When they had kissed each other good-bye, Arthur Crawford had been nineteen, now twenty-nine. But Arthur always thought of her just as he had seen her last, when they kissed each other over the garden gate. And now, when he was alone with his mate and the one star over the tower; and many a night, borne on the long wash of Australian seas, had he lain upon the strait deck and quoted Owen Meredith to that effect: “I was sure of it.”
Jennie and Arthur had corresponded regularly until four months ago, when Jennie's letters suddenly ceased. In the remote island realm where they had related he had expected to get his mail regularly. Letters were dispatched by vessels which casually touched at the island, or by trading schooners which sometimes got caught in treacherous storms, and never heard of any more. But an interval of four months was more than could reasonably be accounted for, and it was this which had decided Arthur to close out his business in the north and go home before he had intended to go.
Arthur noticed a little crowd gathered about the door of the village church. Wedding bells were ringing and a creepy sensation. He longed to ask questions of some of the passers-by, but feared to do so because of what the answer might be. At last he accepted a passing stranger and asked, “Is Mr. Benjamin Crawford still living?”
“Oh, yes,” replied the villager, “but the old man is getting mighty feeble these days. That's his daughter who is being married today. A city chap with lots of money, they say.”
This, then, was the reason of the cessation of Jennie's letters: this was his homecoming; his reward for years of struggle. With the same calm fortitude with which he had borne himself when once some Malay pirates had stripped him and taken him out to amuse themselves with his tortures, he walked toward the church.
The wedding guests were coming out now and there, framed in the door of the church. He saw a girl in bridal array leaning on the arm of a young man whose dress and manner proclaimed the bridegroom. And the girl beneath the veil and orange blossoms was Jennie as he remembered her when he parted from her ten years ago. He placed his hand against a tree for support. Then a howler came over him. It was Jennie—just as he remembered her—but different, nevertheless, in subtle ways. Then his eyes turned to the woman who walked behind the bride—a woman no longer in her first youth but beautiful still. She did not, as he had the bride, fulfill the mental picture of Jennie Crawford which Arthur had carried with him all these years—but at the first glance he knew that she was Jennie. And the other one—the bride—who could she be, then? Had the tropic sun affected his head?
“Why, Arthur, had you forgotten little Carrie?” said Jennie later in the day, when she and the returned wanderer were bridging over the years and getting things straightened out.
“She was nine years old when you went away—a gawky girl, but she improved when she grew up.”
Yes, Arthur was obliged to confess that little Carrie had slipped from his mind. “She looks just as you used to look,” said he.
“Oh, far prettier,” cried Jennie.
“Not half as pretty as you are now,” replied Arthur.
It was some time before the mystery of the interrupted correspondence was cleared up. Letters, in the remote part of the world where Arthur had lived, used to arrive in batches which had collected at some regular postal station to be forwarded as infrequent opportunity occurred. It was found that one batch had gone down in a lost schooner, and another had been left at the wrong island and the savages had used the stamps for decorative purposes; a third batch had arrived at Arthur's island two days after he had sailed away from it. It is quite needless to remark that Jennie and Arthur “lived happy ever after.”

CARL HAGENBECK-GREAT WALLACE CIRCUS
The Carl Hagenbeck-Great Wallace Circus, known as the “Highest Class Circus on Earth” will soon be in our midst as it is scheduled to give afternoon and night performances in Detroit on June 20. The advance advertising men have visited this community and have placed posters in store windows, as well as on barns and fences. Many automobile parties are being arranged and there will be a large delegation go from here to witness the big show.
Since the Carl Hagenbeck and Great Wallace Circus were combined twenty years ago it has been universally recognized as the peer of all trained wild animal shows. During the past winter large groups of jungle-bred lions, tigers and leopards arrived at the Peru, Ind., winter quarters.
Such noted subjugators as Clyde Beatty, the youthful American; Bob McPherson, the noted Scotchman and Capt. Barnard of Italy, will send their charges through sensational routines in the big steel arena.
Many new and startling features are promised. Owing to abandoning the street parade, it was possible to secure better and higher class performers and patrons will witness a much superior performance than heretofore. Such noted acts as the Orrin Davenport Family of equestrians, the Ward-Kimball Troupe of acrobats and Clyde Beatty and his mixed group of lions and tigers are outstanding features. Clownland was searched high and low for slapstick artists and pantomimes and such names as the Arthur Borsella Trio, the Three Harding Brothers; Joe Coyle, Mickey McDonald and Earl Coyle mean plenty of good clean fun.
As the parade has been eliminated the performances will start promptly on time at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. with the doors opening an hour earlier.

Paper From Eucalyptus

Eucalyptus wood has been proved by experimentation to make excellent paper, which is just as desirable as the paper made from spruce wood. It is estimated that this paper can be produced at about half the cost of the present imported variety. The new invention will probably bring the manufacture of paper into prominence in Brazil, while the eucalyptus grows readily in California, New Mexico, Arizona and Florida.

Neglecting None

One of the crowned heads in a downtown business office who has a charge account at the corner drug store in Central avenue, where he lives, sent his young son one evening for a bottle of medicine. The lad was waited on by a new clerk.
“Daddy sent me for some medicine,” the boy told the clerk.
The clerk filled the order and handed the package to the lad, who started toward the door.
The clerk, not knowing the boy or of the account, asked: “Well, son, who is this for?”
The little fellow turned and replied: “For all of us”—Indianapolis News.

On that fishing trip remember the family Use long distance

Long Distance will prove an added convenience on your fishing trip—especially in calling your family. In a few minutes you can have your wife on the telephone. You hear her voice. You talk with her. You know immediately how everything is. There is no waiting for a reply. It's almost as good as being there for those few minutes.

Long Distance rates are remarkably low. And an "Anytime" call after 8:30 at night they are approximately half the day rate.

An "Anytime" call is a call on which you will talk with anyone who answers the telephone.
