

FAIR GROUNDS ARE MOST ACCESSIBLE MICHIGAN POINT

World Famous Highway System Facilitates Here—1926 Visitors Can Dodge All Dense Traffic.

With the recent construction of new roads near Detroit and the widening of others, the State Fair Grounds in Detroit has now become admittedly the most easily accessible point within the borders of Michigan, for the hundreds of thousands who will visit it September 5 to September 11.

When the site of the State Fair Grounds was selected two years ago members of the State Fair Board little realized that it would sometime become the focal point of motorists from all over Michigan. They selected that location on Woodward avenue because a large tract of land could be secured within easy access of Detroiters at a nominal price. The city has now grown to the State Fair Grounds and around it and what were formerly only lanes and country roads near the grounds have become important motoring thoroughfares.

During the past year the Seven-Mile Road, which runs east and west at right angles to Woodward avenue, has been widened on both sides, so that motorists coming from the west, enter part of the state or from the direction of Lansing or Grand Rapids, find a quick way of reaching the State Fair. The Seven-Mile Road intersects both Grand River avenue, which runs northwest from Detroit to Lansing and Grand Rapids, and also intersects Grand avenue, the main thoroughfare to Mt. Clemens, Port Huron, and other cities along the St. Clair River. All residents of the state coming from the direction of Jackson, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Benton Harbor find it now possible to cut north from Michigan avenue to the Seven-Mile Road by any one of a number of concrete highways which will take them around the crowded portion of Detroit.

For those living north of Michigan's metropolis, in Pontiac, Bay City, Saginaw, Alpena, and Mackinaw, Woodward Avenue, now the first highway in the United States, offers the quickest and safest way of reaching the State Fair Grounds.

In order to save the annoyance which motorists experience in making inquiries as to the proper direction to follow in reaching the State Fair Grounds, officials of the State Fair Board are planning on placing at important intersections of highways in Wayne, Oakland and Macomb Counties, signs pointing in the direction of the State Fair. These signs are expected to help motorists very considerably in saving much time that would otherwise be lost in Detroit's dense traffic.

Test for Auto Drivers

A miniature roadway with tiny cars operated by levers has been devised by Dr. Morris S. Viteles, psychologist of the University of Pennsylvania, to test the alertness and quick-thinking powers of chauffeurs applying for licenses to drive automobiles.

Manipulating a lever, the applicant controls the movements of one of the little cars over a miniature road which presents all the problems of a real highway—curves, crossroads and ditches.

To drive the little car without mishap, says Popular Science Monthly, requires not only intelligence, but considerable mental alertness.

Gifted Polynesian Entertainer Unique Chautauqua Feature

Whereahiko Rawel, gifted Polynesian entertainer, will be a unique feature of the coming Redpath Chautauqua. He presents his fascinating program in picturesque native costume amid a tropical stage setting, and portrays the arts, crafts, folklore and tuneful music of the Samoan island people.

Mr. Rawel is a really remarkable man. He was born of Polynesian parents at Pitiptiki, a native Maori settlement, situated on the bank of the

WHEREAHIKO RAWEL

Wanganui River, New Zealand, and when just an infant was orphaned by a night attack upon his father's tribe. Fortune, however, was with the little Polynesian baby, for an English officer rescued him and later adopted him. This led to a European education, and enabled Mr. Rawel to study at Rugby and Cambridge.

Mr. Rawel knows the life of the South Seas; was born to it, has lived it, and presents it in the language of a cultured English gentleman. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote of him: "Whereahiko Rawel is a Polynesian raconteur who fascinates one with the witchery of his word painting, so beware, lest he start you rhapsodizing over Southern Seas."

Valuable New Alloys

A new method for alloying aluminum with other metals to produce a surface resembling glazed porcelain has been discovered, says Popular Science Monthly, by B. M. Jirotska, a German electrical engineer. The new alloys are of special value to the automobile industry in the painting of bodies, it is said, for they produce a body surface which will withstand hard usage, will not show scratches and will combine color with finish, thus doing away with expensive painting.

Has Army of Relatives

Christmas and birthdays are gala occasions for the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stowell, of Windham, Vt. for Quida May, as she has been named, has so many relatives to remember her. The list included twenty-four own uncles and aunts, five uncles and aunts by marriage, ten own cousins, four granddaughters, one great-grandparent, and a small army of second cousins.

Plans Call for Millions

The electric service companies of the United States will, during 1926, spend $734,350,000 upon construction work. Of this amount $174,490,000 will be expended in building steam driven electric generating stations; $164,650,000 for water driven generating stations; $157,550,000 for new transmission systems, and $247,200,000 for distribution lines.
