Oak Floors Protected By Urethane Finish

Developed to give hard-used factory floors a tougher surface, polyurethane finishes are now available to homeowners for added protection to their already long-lived oak floors.

Oak floors finished with a penetrating sealer will be satisfactory for most residential purposes, but every house has some places where traffic and the risk of spills or marks make a urethane finish a worthwhile safeguard.

Kitchens, foyers, halls, and bathrooms get more than their share of activity, and therefore are the most likely candidates for a urethane finish. Oil-modified urethane finishes, now widely available, dry to a hard, lustrous finish which is almost skid-proof and highly moisture-resistant, both valuable qualities in high-traffic areas.

URETHANE finishes glaze over the surface without discoloring it or hiding the color or texture beneath. Estimates vary, but a urethane-treated oak floor can serve five years, or longer, before it needs brightening. Waxing preserves the glossy finish for an even longer time.

A skilled do-it-yourselfer, following the manufacturers' instructions carefully, can apply a urethane finish. It may be brushed on over floors deaned of wax and allowed to dry. The finish may be used over penetrating sealers which soak into the wood and become a part of it.

For new homes, oak flooring in block or parquet patterns is available pre-finished in urethane from the factory.

Strip and plank flooring can be finished on the job by professionals using moisture-cured urethane which affords a somewhat stronger surface than the oil-cured product.

OAK STRIP "SHORTS" — Exposed natural materials on floor, walls, and ceiling give this beautiful room texture, warmth and honesty. The designers of the home chose a floor of No. 2 Common oak strip "shorts" which are inexpensive and have great variety in color and wood pattern.

Why apples don't bear: I'm often asked why apple trees do not bear fruit.

First, let me say that varieties vary in their bearing age. For example, the McIntosh apple tree comes into bearing at the age of six or seven years, dwarfs earlier.

Golden Delicious begins to fruit at a younger age, four to six years. But the Northern Spy begins to fruit very late; trees of this variety rarely begin bearing until they are 12 or more years of age.

Aside from this inherent varietal characteristic, a number of other factors affect the development of flowers and fruit setting. Apple trees which are grown on a dwarfing rootstock, such as the East Malling IX, are not only dwarfed in size but also begin to bear at an earlier age than trees on the standard seedling rootstock.

Also, many varieties of apples cannot be fertilized by their own pollen. So for best fruit yield, plant two different varieties, one of which will serve as a "rooster" tree. Golden Delicious, Red Delicious, Cortland and Jonathan are good pollinator trees to have. One tree by itself seldom produces a full crop. The variety of the rooster tree chosen will not affect the appearance or characteristics of your crop.

Incidentally, if you're going to buy fruit trees from the nursery, you can obtain one-year-old and two-year-old stock, but make sure they aren't any older because older trees don't take hold as quickly as younger trees. Watch out for the peddler who tells you that the older the tree the sooner it comes into bearing. Young trees (one and two years old) come into bearing sooner after planting than the older ones.

GREEN THUMB CLINIC: A reader writes: "Please tell me if we treat our glad bulbs with Lysol, will it prevent insects from attacking the flowers later?"

Answer: Treating bulbs with Lysol (1 1/2 tablespoons per gallon, with bulbs soaked for three hours) is helpful. However, it will not prevent thrips from coming to the spikes. Dust or spray your plants, using Sevin every week to 10 days. Start from the time they are a few inches tall.

Thus, instead of having the water boiling before you pick, you can pick first. Fill the pot with water. A new, built-in convenience!

The plants on which the luscious, eight inch-long ears are produced grow five to six feet tall, their husks covering the ears tightly. They are ready for eating in just 71 days from the date on which seeds are sown — making this an extra-early variety.

WHEN ONLY one vegetable, among all those entered in the All-America Selections trials, wins an award you can be sure it's extra-special. Early Xtra Sweet corn is just that.

Beetle Battle

The cereal leaf beetle, a pest unknown in the United States until 1962, will infest every acre of oats in Michigan this year, according to Michigan State University scientists. However, they are optimistic about the use of parasites that will provide "natural" controls of the beetle.
