McDonald Attacks Inconsistent Laws

WASHINGTON
U.S. Congressman Jack
McDonald, R-Farmington, recently blasted the inconsistencies of State laws pertaining to young persons between the ages of 18 and 20 and urged a complete, national overhaul of the existing laws.
In a speech on the floor of the House, McDonald assailed those laws which gave neartial conflicting responsi-

partial, conflicting responsi-bilities to that particular age group.

THE SPEECH was based on a private study McDonald conducted with the cooperation of the 50 state attorney general. He said he sent a questionnaire to each of the states, requesting information on state statutes concerning this age group.

tion on state statutes con-cerning this age group.

Michigan's Commission on the Age of Majority, while-ken, recently recommended that the age of adult responsi-bility be lowered to 13. The commission was a pointed after the Observen Newspapers questioned Mich-igan's inconsistency in laws regarding the adult age and recommended that they be reviewed.

"My consultations and my position on this issue are not directed toward the right to vote," he said.

directed toward the right to vote," he said.

"They are directed toward all state laws pertaining to the rights and responsibilities of this age group," he said.

McDonald stated that when te topic of the 18 to 29-year-old age group comes up most people think about the right to vote and the right to drink.

WASHINGTON U.S. Rep. Jack McDonald (R-Farmington) has been named a member of a task force to explain the tenets of responsibilities by ignoring the discrepancies in their laws.

Problems in government, he said, "like problems everywhere else, have a way of growing out of proportion when left untended.

"The states are not tending to this problem," McDonald warned.
