

When labor finally understands that it gains nothing if an advance in wages is followed by an advance in prices, it will co-operate with management by means of increased production, and then we shall have real progress.

North Pole No Longer

Lures Bold Explorer

Let us all be frankly sorry for the North pole. The pole is no longer what it used to be. The pole not long ago was a dream by night and a vision by day, and now look at it. An airplane may start out, whizz along a ways, turn and loop about the pole, wave it goodby and leave it by its lonesome.

The North pole was once the lure of the world's bravest. It was a veritable monster that lured ships, and treasure and men to their doom. It was worth column after column in the newspapers. The choicest magazines could not ignore it and our greatest libraries have shelf after shelf devoted to it.

But now with airplanes flying about the North pole, it is no more than the inner shrine of your favorite secret order. Getting there was the whole thing. Once attained it is nothing but a geographical point on the map. There never was anything worth while at the pole, but it was so forbidding that men gladly gave their lives to seek it.

Poor, sorry old North pole—you are one of the world's great has-beens.—Lansing State Journal.

CLOTHES LACKING

First College Girl—We're not going to have class pins this year.
Second Ditto—No. Why?
First Ditto—Well, you've got to have clothes to pin 'em on, haven't you?

And the Coyote Smiled

State officers from Harrisburg, Pa., conducting a vigorous campaign at Greensburg against dog owners who had failed to take out licenses for 1926, saw what they thought was an uncollared shepherd dog in the back yard of John W. Maxwell. They summoned Mrs. Maxwell to the door and informed her that they had discovered that her dog had no license. "We have no dog," said Mrs. Maxwell, sweetly. "Ah, what is that in your back yard?" queried an officer. "It's a coyote," said she, still more sweetly. The officers could find no law to cover the licensing of coyotes and continued on their way.

Beagle "Mothers" Chicks

Bringing home six chicks, Robert Pawson, of Whitestone, N. Y., gave them to his children, who left them in an open box in the yard. Spot, a beagle, strolled over to investigate the cheeping noise and then climbed in. The chicks snuggled under the dog's thick hair, and there the children found them when they returned. Since then the dog and the chicks have been inseparable.

Successful Hobby

The hobby of the gardener at the Central State Teachers' college at Warrensburg, Mo., is tropical fruits. In the greenhouses at the school he has succeeded in raising oranges, lemons, figs and grapefruit. His latest production is a bunch of bananas of medium size, perfectly matured. The banana came from a tree seven feet tall and four years old.

His "Jinx" on the Job

William Banow of Winona, Minn., early in the winter slipped on an icy sidewalk and suffered a broken leg, which kept him confined in a hospital all the winter. Now he is back in the same room in the same hospital and for the same reason. He slipped on his crutches as he left the hospital and the leg was broken again in the same place.

Forgot His Diamonds?

Forty years ago some diamonds, valued at $7,500, were placed in a Kimberly (South Africa) bank for safe keeping and apparently forgotten. Recently the bank published a notice to the depositor or his heirs, giving them three weeks in which to recover the diamonds. The forgetful depositor's name was Cowie.

At the End of a Pencil—

LIKE A tremendously large business organization, in which every modern device for the most perfect of public service is incorporated, yet, which, because of tangled, selfish management is subject to suffer enormous losses, with consequent injustice to trusting stockholders, the State of Michigan, at a crucial point in its historical contour, virtually holds its destiny at the end of a pencil.

Public spirited voters will go to the polls September 14th with a firm resolve to place the reins of Michigan's government in the capable, unswervingly honest hands of
