The Adult Bible Class held their meeting at the home of L. Vincent, Farmington Junction Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Wm. Linemeyer is in Kalamazoo attending the I. O. O. F. convention.

Mrs. Walter Durham entertained the Rebekah Sewing Circle Thursday afternoon.

A. A. Kalder and son Ned attended the foot ball game at Muskegon Saturday and the game at Oxford, Friday.

Miss Angela Byrnes and Miss Irena Taylor of Breton road entertained about 35 school friends Friday evening at the home of Mrs. Roy Taylor. Games and music were enjoyed after which dainty refreshments were served.

Miss Gladys Baker has returned home from college at Mount Pleasant. She will attend a Detroit college.

The Cheerful Circle of the Ladies' Aid are giving a dinner Thursday noon, at the church at 12 o'clock. Mrs. Herald Cox is chairman.

The Cheerful Circle of the Ladies' Aid will give a Halloween Party, Wednesday evening, Oct. 27th at the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Prow and children, of Detroit, attended the banquet at the church, Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sweet and family were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Herald Cox, Sunday.

Mrs. C. H. Witte and son Melvin and mother, Mrs. C. Kurt were Detroit visitors Friday.

About 50 were present at the Sunday school held at the Clarenceville school, Sunday afternoon.

Miss Nancy McDonald and Miss Eva Mackenzie, teachers of the Clarenceville school, were badly injured at Grand River avenue and Oxford avenue, Saturday morning as they stepped off a motor bus. They were struck by an automobile driven by C. J. Weil of Lansing. Miss McDonald has a fractured skull and other injuries and is in a serious condition. Miss Mackenzie has a badly cut hip and head and is very weak from loss of blood, but is getting along nicely. They are both at the Pontiac hospital.

The C. Rodger home on Base line road was badly damaged by fire Sunday morning. The Rodgers' family left for Florida a few days ago and their home was occupied by the Delving family who just moved in the day previous. Fire was caused by a defective chimney.

The reception given by the Adult Bible Class at the M. E. church for the new pastor and family, the Rev. A. Wallis, was well attended. The Ladies served a bountiful supper after which a splendid program was given. E. Knight of Detroit was the main speaker of the evening. Mr. Fairbairn acted as toast master, short talks were given by Mrs. J. Tyler Mrs. Meyer, Mrs. Herrington Mrs. Fairbairn, Robert E. Warner and Wm. Shaw. Music was furnished by Miss Leveridge, Miss William Wilkerson, Mrs. Hardy Mr. Baker, Mrs. Furr and Mrs. Wallard. The Rev. Wallis gave a short talk which made a very good impression on those present. Willis Roberts is in Kalamazoo attending the I. O. O. F. convention held there.

Mrs. Wm. White received word of the death of her father in Belfast, Ireland, Oct. 7th.

The new Sunday School meeting in the High School Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock is open to all. The attendance is growing each week.

Courts are filled with those whose troubles are largely of their own making.

Asylums are filled because people knowingly break laws of health and nature.

To the Wrong Cleaner

By SIDNEY BLAIR

(Copyright.)

A N EVIL spirit seemed to pursue Martha Allen when ever she took any of her clothes to the cleaner, dyed or pressed. Strange things happened to them. There was the case of a white felt hat which had become family history; the cleaner to whom it was sent and lost it, and it had appeared again two months later, when white felt hats had gone out of style, and the weather had turned so cold that nobody who hoped to be fashionable could possibly wear one.

And as Martha was one of the editors of a fashion magazine, she had to dress fashionably or not at all, as she expressed it.

"You can dress, and you can just put on clothes," she told her sister. "It's the latter that attracts me, and the former that I have to do."

One man who ran a cleaning and dyeing establishment which she favored had gone insane and scrubbed the floor with her favorite gray georgette frock. Another one had run away, taking his wife and all his choicest stock—including Martha's best serge coat dress—with him.

Martha had grown sensitive and superstitious about it. She refused to go to a cleaner's herself with her clothes, or to telephone to have the cleaner send for them.

"If some one else does it, the flax doesn't hang over me," she told her sister one morning. "So you be an angel and leave that black satin frock of mine to be pressed, won't you, Janet? I want to wear it tomorrow."

"All right, I'll take it to that new man near the corner," said Janet.

Janet was called out of town that afternoon to see a friend. And the next morning there was nobody who would go to call for Martha's frock; nobody but Martha.

"Oh, well, I can do it; the dress will be there, and I'll get it; that's simple enough," she told herself, and went to the shop near the corner.

The frock was not there. The man in charge knew nothing about it. He had never even heard of a black satin frock belonging to Miss Allen. Her sister had left it the morning before, she told him. He replied that she hadn't. Martha lost her temper, impatiently. The man's wife, who was about Martha's size, appeared on the scene, and Martha, sure that the wife had seen her black frock, liked it and appropriated it, threatened to call the police unless the frock was produced immediately.

The man, almost in tears, begged her to leave the black dresses alone. In his case, ready to be returned to their owners. Perhaps hers was there, with another name put on it by mistake. Would she look? She did, unsuccessfully.

She went home at last, furious at the man, at herself for losing her temper, at the world in general. Her whole day was ruined. Everything went wrong.

She had lunched with a young man whom she particularly liked, and to whom she poured forth her tale of woe.

"But—are you sure there's no mistake?" he asked. "Surely the man wouldn't lie to you."

"There isn't any mistake; he's stolen the dress," Martha declared, positively. Anyone else in the world would find him perfectly honest, but not I."

Her sister returned to town that evening, and the next morning at breakfast asked Martha if she had got her black frock from the cleaner the day before. Martha told her tale all over again.

"But—did you go to that little man near the corner, across the street?" asked Janet. "He speaks perfectly good English, and—"

"Across the street? No! I went to the one on this side. A big man, very dark—"

"I took it to the little blond man," Janet exclaimed. "Between bursts of laughter. "And there you went to the other one and scolded him and threatened to have him arrested for something he didn't do at all—"

"I don't think it's so funny," Martha retorted. "I'll never dare to go past his shop again. I'll be so ashamed—or if I do go, I'll have to crawl on my hands and knees so that he won't see me!"

But she did pass the shop that very day, or rather, she did not pass, but went in and apologized.

"Just for the sake of my conscience," she told the nice young man, when she had lunched with him a few days later. "I'd been so horrid to him, and although he didn't quite understand what it was all about, the apology made me feel better."

The nice young man looked at her quizzically, with a smile that Martha couldn't fathom.

She understood it some time later, when he asked her to marry him, and volunteered an explanation without being asked.

"I'd liked you before that," he told her, "but when you told me that you'd apologized to that cleaner, I realized that you had a sense of fairness that is—well, let's say that it's rare in women. Anyway, that was what got me, Martha. If you'll marry me I'll promise to take all your clothes to the cleaner for you for the rest of my life."

Martha laughed softly.

"I'll take 'em myself," she told him. "The man I apologized to is a paragon among cleaners, the only one I've ever found!"
