

OCC's Glass Collection Has Growing Pains

The waste glass collection center on the Orchard Ridge campus of Oakland Community College is experiencing growing pains — and related problems.

The two-month-old center is sponsored jointly by the OCC Biology Club and "Earth Alive," an ecology group. Currently, the groups collect waste glass from 10 a.m. until 12 noon on Saturdays and on Sundays from 2 until 4 p.m. near the entrance to the college off Orchard Lake Road near 196 in Farmington.

The ecology project has been so successful that they have outgrown the three 200 gallon collection barrels. The group needs volunteers to man the collection site and also to transport the glass to the Michigan State Fairgrounds.

"We are both delighted and dismayed at the response," said Nancy Sheehan, of Earth Alive. She said that they have been averaging a half-ton of throw-away glass every weekend despite the miserable weather and limited collection times. "Many local groups are now bringing large loads," she said. "For example, one Girl Scout Troop, Troop 899 of West Bloomfield, accounted for about a quarter-ton all by itself last week. And the Farmington High School Ecology Club had almost that much the week before."

Environment Groups Listed

"About 80 per cent of the organizations listed in the directory have since 1969," he pointed out. The directory stems from questionnaires mailed last summer by Environmental Resources, Inc., a Washington, D.C.-based group that evolved from the "Earth Day" movement of a year ago.

Hornback said the long hours of tedious compilations this winter were lightened by the imaginative and graphic names adopted by recent environmental groups, such as CHOKED (Care for Our Keep the Environment), GASP (Group Against Smog and Pollution) and AMEN (Avert Man's Extinction Now).

He said there has been a proliferation of such groups in recent years but little effort has been made to coordinate their efforts.
