Costume of a champion

Amishi Doshi, the 13-year-old daughter of Lalit and Usha Doshi of Farmington Hills, displays the costume she wore when she won the 1991 national championship in Indian folk dance over the Labor Day weekend in Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C. Amishi, who performs in a group of 12, won a regional competition in St. Louis in July. Amishi is a freshman at Mercy High School in Farmington Hills.

Session focus is conflict

A day-long conference on managing conflict planned for Wednesday, Oct. 30, sponsored by the Birmingham-Bloomfield Task Force on Race Relations and Ethnic Diversity with New Detroit, Inc.

Reservations, which are encouraged, must be made by Oct. 21. The 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. program is at The Community House, 380 S. Bates in Birmingham.

Participants will explore resolution methods for conflicts in the workplace, issues of suburban-urban cooperation, educational equity and conflicts in religious beliefs. Each participant may choose one area of interest to focus on throughout the day.

Keynote speaker is Richard Benjamin, superintendent of the Ann Arbor Public Schools. Benjamin was one of the key administrators in court-ordered school desegregation in the Lansing schools in the early 1970s and the Ann Arbor schools in the 1980s.

The conference registration fee is $25 for adults and $15 for students. Registration forms are available at The Community House.

For more information, call Debbie Macon, co-convenor of the task force, at 626-4111 or Shirley Bryant, conference chairwoman, at 258-3347.
