21898 Farmington Road/Farmington, MI 48336

Tom Baer editor/477-5450

O&E Thursday, December 12, 1991

Winnersville

Our prep stars are shining

issues.

ITY OF champions . . . that's Farmington Hills now that the football and girls' basketball state tournaments are history.

By now everyone who cares about high school sports knows that Farmington Harrison captured the Class BB football championship flow. 30 with a 34-7 thamping of Cheboygan in the Pontiae Silverdome. It was the fifth football title for the school.

Then Mercy High, an all-girl Catholic school located about a mile and a half southeast of Harrison, went all the way to the Class A girls' basketball finals before losing to Detroit King, 52-36, Saturday in Battle Creek.

The excellent showings reminded us of 1982, that memorable year when the same two schools won fittles in the same two sports. At the time, we recall making the rather facetious suggestion that it was probably something in the water that made champions.

that it was probably sometimes.

Of course we know better. We have a feeling that as long as the two class-act head coaches — Harrison's John Herrington and Mercy's Larry Baker — stick around there'll usually be something to celebrate, sportswise, around those T'S MADD-ening ... that people have to resort to holding "candlelight vigils" to raise awareness about the problem of drunks driving, as Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) did last Monday at Nardin Park Methodist Church in Farmington Hills.

Yes, the vigils are getting to be kind of gruesome old hot around the holidays, but we hope the MADD folks keep them up. They're needed as long as drunks continue to use autos to slaughter themselves and other people on our highways. The candles will be burning a long, long time, we fear.

fear.
The vigil also begins national Anti-Drunk Driving Week.

DDS AND ends, bits and pieces . . . our opinions on several Farmington-area issues.

TTVS TOO BAD . . . that our city officials now have to worry about fending off the state in this "home rule" battle that seems to be building.

building.

The flap revolves around Senate Bill 486, which slipulates that a registered family day care home be considered a residential use. A local ordinance couldn't prevent it.

Both city councils have indicated concern about the state trying "to take home rule away from us," according to a Farmington councilman. Well, perhaps all the facts aren't in, but it seems to us that the state's role is to help, not hinder, local governments.

Our pols have have so many problems on the local level on which to test their talents. They shouldn't have to fight (or even worry about fighting) the monster in Lansing.

Two stories on the issue appeared in the Dec. 9 Farmington Observer.

JUST A REMINDER... If people at the 47th District Court in Farmington are thinking of asking again for public money to expand and renovate the courthouse (we've heard rumors), they should also come up with a leader this time — someone who can present the need for the improvements to a skeptical electorate.

A SLR million bond issue for the courthouse.

tical electorate.

A $1.8 million bond issue for the courthouse went down in flames last election day because there simply was no plan to support it. When something was finally done, it was too little and too late.

too late.

And that was too bad, we might add, because in our opinion the renovation of the courthouse was really needed. It can get pretty crowded in that white building on 10 Mile Road.

Now we're getting letters from residents advising that the sitting judges work harder instead of asking for public money to build some country club of a courthouse. More than a few voters are turned off to the issue, we think.

Oh well, let's hope our judicial establishment learns from its mistakes.

Linchnin

Take heart in the small steps to reunite area

JUST AS ADDICTION can only be approached one day at a time, rac-ism can only be alleviated one step at a time.

Some people and groups in Detroit and our suburbs are taking some of

An invitation to attend a city/sub-urban race relations conference, sponsored by New Detroit Inc. last week was sent to school, police, cler-gy and elected officials from all our Oakland and western Wayne County suburbs.

From our area, only Birmingham,
Farmington Hills, Southfield and
Bloomfield Hills (schools) sent repre-

Farmington Hills, Solubiled and Hoomtield Hills (schools) sont representatives. The thrust of the conference was "Building Bridges." Fanch members talked about various projects, they were involved in that brought people of different backgrounds together. The idea: Here's what people can do in your community. • William Nabers, president of the South Oaktand NAACP, told of a two-year "Black-Jewish dialogue" with Temple Israel in West Bloomfeld, which has included social and educational activities, Joint charitable projects and is now branching out "to address issues of economics and politics." Hustoley from the out "to address issues or commu-and politics."

• Edward Hustoles from the Southeast Michigan Council of Gov-ernments spoke of the regional ef-forts that will involve many people to revive Eight Mile Road, as well as the efforts his predominantly white

Catholic parish is making to keep open its parochial school to serve the primarity black, non-Catholic popuration black, non-Catholic popuration of the control of the cont

SOMETIMES SILENCE says

SOMETIMES SILENCE says more than applause. The 70 or so people attending had just viewed a WTVS show, shown earlier this year, that portrayed a student partnership between a Birdingham and Detroit elementary school and how it is changing the perceptions of those students. It is not a thrown-together, let's goons-abus one-time filed trip. It is a more solid program, which is being built up over time, with students talking about it, being patred up with a child at the other school, writing him or her letters, doing a wideo letter, spending time together and perhaps extending that to family visite. Before starting the exchange lingham Parms Elementary such than the state of the students mike of exchange determined the control of the state of the state

Judith Berne Judith Doner

mentary had almost no idea of what or where Birmingham was — the suburbs being no part of their world. Many of those who attended the 'Building Bridges' conference were impressed that Birmingham is the only suburban school district which is committed to such a program.

NOT EVERYONE, "When you put

NOT EVERYONE. "When you put these kids in a line, who's going to get the job?" voiced Helen Kelly, a board member of New Detroit. "The money (for education) needs to be put in one pot, "she insists.

That it still comes down to economics was echoed by Hussioles: "Racism is like a fog that sits all over us," he said. "If racism were alleviated, economic problems would still exist."

Still, the small steps being taken by various groups to reunite Detroit and its supurbs can add up to that bridge. And those who care about the city we all want to share again can city we all want to share again can be heartened.

Judith Doner Berne is assistant managing editor for the Oakland County editions of the Observer &

Mistrust Enact legislative ethics code

cteers in the same scurrilous tones. However, the car dealers quite frankly say that used cars are sold "as is."

Politicians come with no written guarantee on performance or dedication, but maybe they should, Questionable behaviors contribute to the public's growing distrust of elected officials. That's something that conflict of interest and

That's sometiming that connects in the code of ethics legislation could resolve.

A legislator can be working in the Michigan House or Senate one day protecting the electorate's best interest and then — voila — finds employment as a lobbyist using those legislative connections to work for the new employer's best CHANGING alleglance overnight is not novel. It happened once this year when state Sen. Douglas Cruce, who represented Troy and Birmingham, resigned his position — which included chairing the state's insurance committee — to become president of the Michigan Insurance Federation, a lobbying firm in business to find the best legislative deal possible for insurance earriers.

carriers.

But Cruce's two-step isn't a new legislative dance. It's happened often enough in the past — Sen. Kerry Kammer and Reps. Bobby Crim and Gary Owen. It's the ease of jumping that legislative feese that makes voters wonder whose intive fence that makes voters wonder whose in-terest is being served — the public in general or the legislator in specific.

A political reputation can be dashed in just a few seconds when a legislator becomes a lobbyist for groups that may not serve the best interests of those who have voted for and supported the former elected official. And it's time something is done about it.

What needs to be weighed is a person's right to find gainful employment against the ideal of an honest politiclan. Often, perceptions mean more than reality and that probably is the case in this dilemma. If legislators were to police themselves, that would go a long way to change the minds of those voters who think that all politicians are crooks.

To punish uneavary to be decayed.

To punish unsavory job changes, legislators need a bill passed that specifically lists length of time before resigning a seat and taking a lobby-ing job plus setting penalties.

THE MICHIGAN Constitution already has that provision for its judges, which states that judges must stay clear of jobs with potential conflicts of interest for "the period of his service and for one year thereafter." Even if not re-elected, a judge still must wait one year — a cooling off period—before taking a job that could make voters question the integrity of the judiclary. A similar conflict of interest law for legislators could restore some faith in those elected officials.

A lobbying firm may not be as interested in a has-been legislator if the professional relationships have had one year to cool.

Voters should pressure lawmakers into enacting some kind of legislation that would eliminate the conflicts of interest. Legislators, too, should embrace a code of ethies that would enhance the elected position and give greater confidence in those who hold those seats. THE MICHIGAN Constitution already has that

from our readers

Let's work with officials

To the editor:

To the editor:

The "concern" expressed about school board decisions (letter, Dec. 5) sounded more like tired campaign related to the control of the latest teacher contract that we are unhappy with. But we didn't have to put a complete package together and sell it. As for a one-year contract, with a state run amok, Farmington's contract is preferable to a Troy or Rochester contract that books in three years of 6 percent increases.

The points concerning cablecasting were well made. The board considered all of those points and more. They made a compromise based on value. Do I tright, but do it economically. They could have spent more cally. They could have spent for the control of the con tle tess. But a little less would have been a total waste.

The poishots at curriculum were scary. There is no such thing in Farmington as untested, unproven curriculum. Such claims indicate parental education is needed. Typi-cal of this is the attack on inventive speciling.

It does not mean that children are not taught to spell. It does mean that If you are interested in developing the ability, desire, and pleasure in a the annuy, usure, and pleasure in a child to express themselves with the written word, do not stille and/or demoralize them with what they did wrong. Celebrate what they have done right.

Reading, spelling lists, spelling tests, editing and publishing final draits — after the ideas have been generated — are the places to emphasize and teach spelling.

There are a lot of issues faced by all of us in this district — innaering secondary curriculum, facility improvements and contracts are a few. Express your expectations and concerns to the administration, board and staff and work with them in making decisions for our district arther than the time of the spelling of the sidelines and complaining after the fact.

Dave York, Farmington Hills

He recalls editor fondly

To the editor:

My fellow band members and I would like to send our deepest sympathies to the family of Loraine McClish. She was a very kind wom-tled "R&B To The Max." Not only did we learn a few things about our-selves by some of the questions she saked, but also she made if fun. We thought when we were to be interviewed, it would be by some "old grouch" that probably did not even have an open mind to the music we create and/or Rock'n'Roll altogether. We believed she would hammer us

We believed she would hammer us with questions quickly and without discussion or interest just to get the job done. Instead It was Loraine making us laugh and feel at ease.

I know I arm ont telling the people at the newspaper anything new when I say Loraine was nice, fun, and easy to get along with. She is not someone to be forgotten. We would tell everyone the same exact thing.

Michael James Poloskey Jr.,

Detroit

Opinions are to be shared

Opinions and ideas are best when shared with others.
That's why the Farmington Observer encourages its readers to share their views with others in the From Our Readers column.

Submitting a letter to the edfor for publication is easy. Let-ters should be typewritten or printed legibly and kept to 300 words. Letters must be signed and include the address of the Names will be withheld only for the best of reasons, and the decision to do so will be made by the editor.

Letters should be mailed to: the editor, The Farmington Observer, 21898 Farmington Road, Farmington 48336.

Government fulfills promise of rights in old parchments

everywhere.

For more than 200 years, Americans have been constantly learning about individual rights and the challenges of sustaining them. We have learned by living out the promise of the "old parchments."

While many nations are based upon a con religion or ethnic heritage or upon natural geo-graphic frontiers, Americans have made rights the foundation of our national identity.

We provided for a government to secure those niversary of the Bill of Rights.

This concludes our series marking the anniversary of the Bill of Rights.

200ıh

Bill of Rights

rights. Our Declaration of Independence offered the promise of such a government. The Constitution was the fulfillment of that promise in its system of ordered liberty.

Even our failure as a nation has been measured by the rights to which we aspire.

Together with the subsequent amendments and those rights contained in the original Constitution, the Bill of Rights articulates the fundamental ideals of liberty, justice and equality which not only have shaped the American experience but also have made our system a beacon to other nations seeking a better life.

This concludes our series marking the an-

Observer & Eccentric Newspapers

Steve Barnaby managing editor Judith Doner Berne assistant managing editor Dick Isham general manager Mark Lewis director of advertising Fred Wright director of circulation

Suburban Communications Corp. Philip Power chairman of the board Richard Aginlan president