

Art sale helps Scouts

Dawson worked for the group in several capacities until 1973 when she decided to devote all of her time to her art.

"I loved every bit of it," she said. "It was a move that changed her life. Her efforts as a newcomer to meet people led her to take evening art classes."

"Ten years later, I had a full-time career," she said. She paints a variety of subjects ranging from children, flowers and animals to kaleidoscopic views of Birmingham available at local stores.

For the Girl Scout sale she exhibited the pictures of animals, flowers and children that were inspired by trips she and her husband, Peter, have taken to more than 70 countries.

Some of her watercolors, such as that of a humorously indignant ostrich, have been translated into lithographs as well.

LOLA SONNENSCHNEIN brought jewelry that aspires to be hand-held sculpture.

Sonnenschnein, an artist for close to 30 years, began making the metal and glass pieces after years as a sculptor. Her work incorporates the acrylic glass that changes its color after firing.

"I wanted to make something I can hold in my hand," she said.

Within the last three years, her jewelry designs have proved so successful, she has hired someone to help her. Her jewelry has been shown and sold in five museums and stores across the country. Ironically, she never studied jewelry making and began taking metalsmith classes last September.

Sonnenschnein, who began her career as an illustrator in New York, plans to continue making jewelry but wants to translate those designs into wall pieces as well.

Birmingham artist Julie Dawson (left) and Maggie Allesoe hold one of Dawson's paintings that Allesoe bought at an art exhibit and sale to benefit the Michigan Metro Girl Scout Council. Allesoe is on the honorary committee for the event.

'Flute Lady' spreads cheer to kids, adults

"It doesn't have a B key, it doesn't have all the things you're supposed to. But it makes a lovely sound, and it makes people very happy."

HOPKINS STUDIED the flute until she was 18. She stopped playing it after her marriage. But when she started playing Christmas carols by ear to her children 10 years later, she decided to continue her music. That was 21 years ago.

"So for two years I learned my flute inside out."

This included taking lessons at the University of Michigan as well as listening to birds.

When a teacher at the U-M told Hopkins, "You really can't do what you're doing," referring to her musical technique, she replied, "What if I don't know that?"

HOPKINS, WHOSE son is disabled, played for disabled youngsters at schools and at the Unitarian Church. She played for children at Beaumont Hospital for 4 1/2 years.

For the past 1 1/2 years she has played her flute at Children's Hospital. She is also active in the Troy Chorus.

"I get the most enjoyment playing for people."

THE Flute Lady's music has calmed children down and helped parents as well. Sometimes a parent who is trying to be brave finds the warm and friendly Hopkins to be someone to talk to.

"Playing by ear gives you mobility... so you can come in close with a sick child or stand away."

Hopkins credits her embouchure ("all the muscles in the face that go to make you able to play the flute") with helping her control her emotions while playing for seriously ill children.

"You can't show them how sad you are or you're not effective."

THE Flute Lady's visits bring more than smiles to young patients.

One patient she grew close to was a 22-year-old man who looked 7 because of a kidney disease. He was a computer whiz and knew music "forward and backward," Hopkins said.

What was hard for him as a child wasn't so much the other youngsters growing bigger than him, but their being able to play the piano, she said.

"You see a lot of things."

"I have no intention of ever stopping it. To go in and give 45 minutes of entertainment... it brings an intimacy... brings people together."

"The children seem to enjoy her playing, and they like it when she comes around," nurse Joe Znoy said.

"She'll usually say hi to the child, and see if they have any particular favorite or request. It helps."

HOSPITAL STAFFERS and Hopkins develop relationships.

Last year, a nurse, at Hopkins' request, taught her a Christmas song from grade school after Hopkins heard her singing it.

When others asked Hopkins what it was after hearing it performed, Hopkins called it "May's Christmas Carol," after the nurse.

Another nurse used to sing to Hopkins' music.

One staffer told Hopkins about reading about other hospitals in a newsletter.

"We have something others don't," the staffer said. "We have The Flute Lady."

NOW HOPKINS is branching out, to birthday parties and possibly nursing homes, accompanied by one of three friends who are sopranos. They call themselves The Flute Lady and Friends. To contact them, call 645-1789.

"If you're a musician and you really love what you do, you want everyone to hear it. You can play 'Three Blind Mice' as beautiful as 'Ave Maria.'"

Photographer sets workshop series

The Messina Photography Workshops On Location will start their 20th year next month.

The workshops are taught by professional photographer and lecturer Joseph Messina, who has lectured in the area. For more information, call Messina at 773-5815 during business hours.

The new term will start at 2 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 4, at the Henry Ford Centennial Library, 16301 Michigan Avenue, Dearborn. A free slide lecture and orientation will take place at that time.

Other sessions will take place at various locations in the metro Detroit area for 10 Saturdays until March 7. Plans this year include photographing actors on stage with costumes and makeup, a historic church and stained glass in Hamtramck, mosaic murals at the People

Mover, glass, still lifes and a mannequin factory.

CLASSES ARE geared to people who know how to use their 35mm cameras. There's no limit to 20 students weekly.

Fees per student, payable in advance, are $150 full time, $90 part time for three sessions or $35 per session attended. No refunds after classes have started Jan. 11. To join the class, send a check to Messina Photography Workshops, 22500 Rio Vista, St. Clair Shores 48081. Film, processing mailers and plastic file folders are available through Messina.

The spring workshops start at 2 p.m. April 4 at the Henry Ford Centennial Library. Trips are planned to Chicago and the Toledo Museum of Art.
