Missing man's body is found

Drowning was the cause of death for computer programmer James S. Owens, who disappeared from his parents' home on Middle Straits Lake in West Bloomfield more than three weeks ago, according to the office of the Oakland County Medical Examiner.

Owens' partially decomposed body was found by a fisherman late Wednesday in Cass Lake, floating in shallow water about 10 feet off Marsh Bank Park, said Ronald Cronin, West Bloomfield police chief.

An autopsy completed Thursday indicated Owens had been dead for some time and possibly died the day he disappeared (April 30), said Dr. Konu Virani, chief deputy medical examiner. Owens, a 1981 graduate of Walpole Lake Central High School, would have celebrated his 30th birthday on May 9.

"There's no way to pinpoint the exact time of death," said Virani. "But the decomposition (of the body) is consistent with it's having been in cold water for several weeks."

Grand River-Halsted — show a problem. "These are high accident frequency locations. They are major intersections," Goss said.

How about the Nine Mile-Farmington intersection where six accidents were reported on the Hills side and 26 on the Farmington side. Altogether, 32 accidents were reported there in 1990.

Other intersections that will be targeted in the continuing enforcement program include Drake-Grand River, Nine Mile-Farmington, Eight Mile-Farmington and Nine Mile-Grand River.

Most of the violations at these sites occur while trying to get through the intersections and at the traffic signals, Goss said.

■ 'If we looked at the reports, you wouldn't think these intersections ranked the highest accident-wise.'

Sgt. Ray Cranston

Because these intersections are congested, frustrations bubble and motorists can be seen making a left turn after the light has turned red just to get on their way.

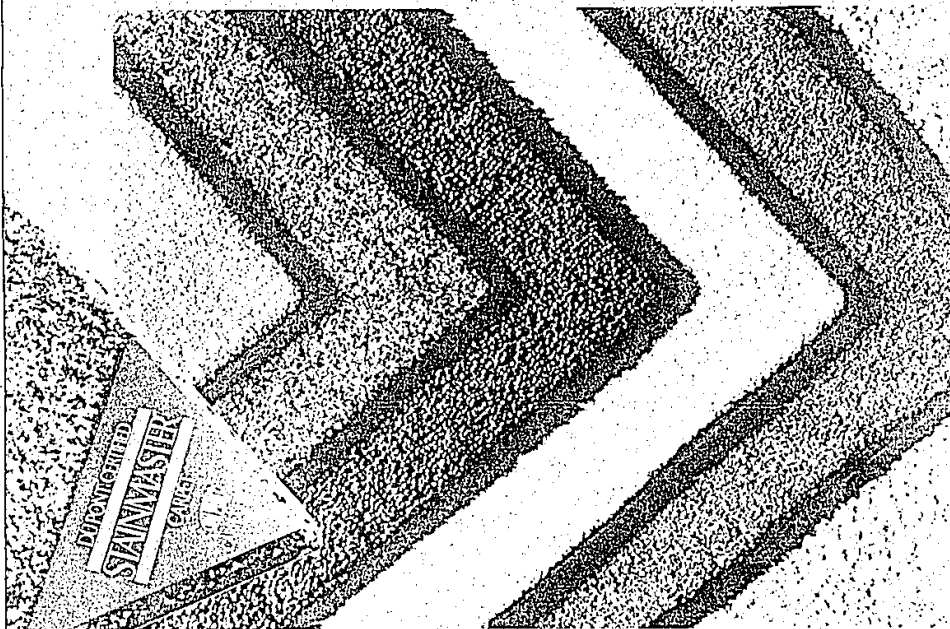

Or when the light turns green and the motorist wants to make a left, they don't always yield to oncoming traffic — like anyone they want to get on their way, Goss said.

"The problem is that there's a guy on the other side of the street who also has waited through the light for five times and wants to go, too," Goss said.

"Most people are doing these things out of frustration and we understand that. But you're only taking your own life and those people around you in danger."
