Over-Population Worst Problem

By KATHY MORAN

Congressman Jack McDonald (R-Farmington) branded over-population as the "number one problem in the world" in a meeting with the Farmington and Bloomfield Hills League of Women Voters last week.

After getting off to a late start, the congressman skimmed the surface on a wide-range of subjects during a question and answer period with about 30 women.

"We talk about pollution, poverty and war, but I think over-population is the number one problem in the world," he said.

"Every single problem will get worse because of over-population."

HE ADDED that Congress should make funds and information available on birth control which should be distributed world-wide.

McDonald, whose 19th district includes Redford Township, Livonia, and Farmington, was equally emphatic when talking about economic assistance to foreign countries.

"I have never voted for economic aid for countries," he said. "I think that aid should be in the form of technical assistance."

He gave the example of American assistance to Jordan where, through technical assistance, people have learned to grow their entire wheat crop instead of importing quantities of it.

McDonald also spoke in favor of withdrawing all American troops and assistance from Vietnam as well as a portion of the 500,000 troops in Europe.

He said that the United Nations should admit Red China, adding that it would have the double effect of increasing pressure on the Soviet Union in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT).

GETTING CLOSER to home, McDonald said he would like to see federal revenue-sharing in the form of the federal government picking up part of the tab of welfare costs as well as distributing money to local governments to be used where the local units see the needs.

This would be a compromise between two proposed plans. One calls for the government assuming welfare costs and President Nixon's plan which calls for the federal government sharing its funds with state and local units.

"If the government assumed all the costs of welfare, I think two states (New York and California) would get about 40 per cent of the money," he said. "The poorer states would get almost nothing."

McDonald said there is "growing sympathy" for making the presidency just one six-year term as well as giving U.S. senators a maximum of two six-year terms and House members approximately a maximum of five three-year terms.

"I think there should be some form of mandatory retirement for years of service," he said.

"I don't think it should be by age," he responded to a question on a bill that would make retirement mandatory at age 65.
