Bad move, Lowell.

This year's tourney attracted more than 5,000 teams and about 350,000 people came out to watch. Imagine how much money they all spent in town.

Most of the Belding streets are lined with backboards and for one weekend the townies don't mind using their front yards as cheering sections.

The best part about this tournament might be running into old friends.

While walking around Mackerville on Saturday I heard a voice from a distance call out an old nickname of mine.

"Caveman," the voice bellowed.

It was Michael Travis, an old friend from Central Michigan whom I haven't seen in seven years.

Girls love to come watch their boyfriends play.

"This is awesome, they should have it every weekend," said Kristen Dressel, a 16-year-old from Jenison.

While Scott McNeal, alias Gus Macker, appreciates the compliment he's glad there's only one tournament each year in Belding.

"That would be pretty crazy (having one every weekend); I feel like a balloon ready to burst," said McNeal, whose all-world tour is making 53 stops in 1992.

Next year is the 20th anniversary of the Gus Macker and McNeal is planning to make it one to remember in Belding. He'd like to bring the garage from his parents' former home in Lowell to Belding to mark the occasion.

"We have the backboard and rim, we just don't have the garage," he said. "We'd also like to have a 'legends' game for some former players."

Since I'm no legend I'll probably go back to playing in the media division. I think that's a better move than any I made all weekend.

The Gus Macker Tournament will be held Aug. 22 and 23 at Oakland University in Rochester. Team entree fee is $65; and registration deadline is July 24. Call 1-800 876-1100P or (810) 794-1500 for more details and application information.

cut to 32, and a step-ladder elimination process will begin, culminating with the gold-medal match between the two remaining archers.

"I like the format a lot because, though there is more pressure, it makes you concentrate more," O'Donnell said. "With 12 arrows, you know every arrow counts. You don't get caught up in the score as much. You want to make sure every arrow is going in the middle. Before, with 36, if you messed up on one, you could recover.

"With the elimination format and big scoreboard under the target — it shows the score of the arrow as it hits the target — it will be quick and fast-paced," she said.

O'Donnell will have the support of her father, Jack O'Donnell, a former archer who got her involved in the sport and will also make the trip to Barcelona.

"I think he had more confidence in me than I did for awhile," O'Donnell said. "I think he's happy for me making the team and seeing all the hard work pay off."
