

Internship's a learning experience for student

LARK SAMUELIAN

Mike McEvoy, Farmington Hills resident, has been an intern with SWOCC for the spring and summer terms. He is a student at Madonna University.

He had two goals throughout the term. The first was to become more familiar with the studio technology, and therefore, produce an in-studio show to help the public understand how to cooperate with a crew member, who may be hearing-impaired.

His second goal was to become more proficient on remote productions. He created several short music videos with use of his home camera, dubbed up to cable-casting format in the editing process. As he learned how to edit on the A-B Roll system, he also selected video to relate to the music.

Mike created special effects very simply by allowing his sense of visuals and motion to provide the viewer an unusual feeling as they survey the landscape of the waters surrounding the State of Michigan. Mike said it was extremely important to let himself follow his instincts as an idea formed in his head. Spontaneity was the characteristic with slow motion made the special effects successful. It didn't cost money, nor was there elaborate scripting.

Although Mike's internship has concluded, as a resident he will continue to be involved with video as he proceeds in his college education. Some of his video is so effective that it has inspired him to now turn it into environmental public service announcements.

This type of creativity should be applauded and encouraged. Congratulations, Mike. We look forward to helping you develop your creative expressions through community television.
