Several other awards were at the conclusion of the two-day Design and Construction Expo.

The Hastings Award, in honor of the late Robert F. Hastings, past president of Michigan AIA and a highly regarded Michigan architect and civic leader, was presented to Timothy A. Casal.

Casal is a principal with TMP Associates, Inc. in Bloomfield Hills. A member of TMP's design team for more than 15 years, he has served as project designer and manager on a number of the firm's major commissions and award winning buildings.

Casal was named Young Architect of the Year by AIA Detroit in 1988. Casal graduated from the University of Michigan in 1973 and received a master's degree in architecture with high distinction in 1975. He is a Birmingham resident.

John Gallagher, architectural writer for the Detroit Free Press, and Ernest Hickson, marketing supervisor at Detroit Edison, have been named honorary members of the AIA Michigan.

Honorary membership is granted to an individual not eligible for AIA membership but who has rendered distinguished service to the profession.

Gallagher writes about suburban sprawl and downtown renovation and has moderated several programs for both AIA Michigan and AIA Detroit.

Hickson has promoted the AIA through Detroit Edison for a number of years. Due to his endeavors, the utility has supported the Hastings Award, the AIA Michigan Convention and the Beaubien House Arts Commission art openings. In addition, he has offered support to the Michigan Foundation High School Design Competition.

Eugene C. Hopkins is recipient of the 1992 Young Architect of the Year award. Hopkins was a founding partner of the Ann Arbor firm of Architects Four in 1984 and currently serves as director of documents and construction. He is a recognized leader in historic preservation. He received a master's degree in architecture from the University of Michigan in 1976.

Richard C. Frank of Saline is this year's recipient of the AIA Gold Medal. It is the highest honor the society can bestow upon a member.

Historic preservation has been the focus of Frank's life. His projects number nearly 600, spanning 28 states, 70 cities and nearly 40 years.

On a national level, he has been involved with such prominent award winning projects as the Smithsonian Institution Arts & Industries building, the Library of Congress, and the Old Post Office in Washington D.C.

AIA Michigan is a professional organization dedicated to advancing the architectural profession.
