Lagerfeld's pastel floral printed evening dresses with eight two-inch bands of black Alencon lace were outstanding. Low-heeled an-kle boots were used extensively.

Finally, Lagerfeld presented his Chanel collection. The ultra-short cut-away pastel/white dog-tooth-check wool tweed bolero worn with sleeveless tunies of the same tweed, and with white bell-bottomed trousers or skirts, was a story unto itself.

For sharp contrast, the same dog-tooth-check tweed, hip-bone-length jackets were shown open over a white bra, and with a black rose in the tense with white cotton men's briefs showing a block/ white Chanel label front and center on the waistband. The briefs were accessorized with double gold metal/black leather chains. White ribbed knee shocks and white "gpm" shoes with solld black toos completed the "costume."

with Givenchy, Jean-Louis Scherrer and Jean Charles Castel-bejac, the new silhouette was ap-parent but to a lesser degree. Cas-telbejac translated this new clon-gated look into casual garments using linen, hemp and other natur-al fibers along with color accents in an outstanding way. His black group combined with camel color was especially strong.

Armani protested

While Madona was in Paris and London promoting her book "Sex," it was in Milan that she created a semi-circus crisis by drawing the press away from the showings. Georgic Armani was one of the protestors.

Despite the turmoil, Versace and Armani managed to produce excellent collections that were directional. One of the best pres-entations in Milan was produced by the Turkish-born Englishman, Rifat Ozbek.

In summary, with a new fashion direction firmly in place, the question turns to how quickly it will be accepted — sooner rather than later in Europe where it is already being seen on the streets of Paris and Nice, and much later rather than sooner in Detroit.

Skin ironing is a new technique at the Tamara Institute De Beaute in Farmington Hills. "It's the ultimate revitilizing treatment. It relieves stress on sundamaged skin, or stressed-out skin from not enough sleep," Tamara Friedman said.

After a massage, the skin is ironed with a heated, mini facial-iron, which is pressed over trouble spots to force deep penetration of the treatment. Afterward, you look "really glowing. It almost looks like you had a facelift. It provides total relaxation," she said.

Other treatments at the salon include a Deep Pore Cleansing Facial, a Bio-Cellular Dermalift to promote firmness and mini-mize lines, and an Oil Control Re-gulating Facial with 100 percent pure plant extract.

Research suggests that people who write with a felt-tipped pen have a sensuous nature. If this is the pen she uses most of the time, it is safe to conclude she is highly susceptive to influences through her senses. Aesthetic pleasures are a must. The heauty of nature fills her with joy and wonder.
Our writer is a people person.
She enjoys people of all persuasions and likes to be in the center of things. In her relationships, she is flexible and flows with the tide, not against it. Her ready empathy helps her feel both for and with atthers.
She has been blessed with intu-

aliout some aspect of her life.

She is a self-startor and efficiency is her hallmark. She has a direct manner and does not waste time or ability on things which are unimportant to her. A contradiction here could be the fact she cocasionally procrastinates where things she dislikes are concerned.

things she dislikes are concerned.

Self-discipline is much in evidence. Rarely does she rest until she has taken care of her obligations. No matter how she is feeling, she observes the old adage, "Business before pleasure."

An element of caution weaves through this handwriting. A tendency to be self-conscious in also here. These findings tell us she rarely jumps into situations without mentally checking them out first.

An aversion to criticism cannot.

An aversion to criticism cannot be missed. And although she is vulnerable to it, she does not give her feelings away in her body language, so others may not even be aware of her sensitivity. She has a strong need for recognition and approval from those around her. When it is not forthcoming, she may feel unloved.

Signs of a vivid imagination turn up in this handwriting. This would make her fun and interesting in social exchange and could add another dimension to her work.
