Cranbrook student art in show

"Open Face Club Sandwich," a multimedia show by students at the Cranbrook Academy of Art in Bloomfield Hills, continues this month at Industry, 15 S. Saginaw in Pontiac. The exhibit features sculpture, installations, assemblages and video. Most of the work was created for the aesthetics of Industry.

Two installations are housed in the fourth floor of the building, which has never been open to the public. Another installation is in the adjacent outdoor courtyard.

Participating artists, all residents of Birmingham and Bloomfield, are Christina Bechstein, Ilja Blanus, Theo Coulombe, Sara Cummings, Thom Faulders, C. Fe Jimenez, Colin Koefo, Terry Kim, Benjamin King, Mark Knutson, Mary Magsamen, Amy Nodler, Anna Rainer, Amy Ruffo, Laura J. Shope and Kevin Thomas.

Nadler has combined plaster and cement with such found objects as feathers and lippers, forming rock-like shapes that seem to have strange interior scope or contents.

Magsamen's assemblages of familiar objects correspond with everyday experiences of the conscious and subconscious. They challenge the viewer to consider them in one or more of the following aspects: personally, spiritually, politically, socially and symbolically.

The performance and installation works by Bechstein and Rainer are about inclusion of the city, the viewer and the community into an art dialogue. Call Industry at 334-1999.
