Mead, who's taught Clufetos for seven years, agreed: "He's the last person to blow his own horn, but he's behind those drums, the synergy is gone."

Aside from the drums, Clufetos is a normal gangly teen. He plays guitar and trumpet in the band at Von Hayes Middle School, where he also helps teach his peers the drums. His friends have bands, but he prefers to sit back and watch them, choosing not to show them up.

Although only in his early teens, Clufetos is a touring veteran, having played drums in his father's band throughout the United States. (They will release an album, "Then and Now," on Atlanta's Buttercup Records on June 20.) At first, he said, he was apprehensive about telling his teachers why he was going to miss school.

"I just said, 'I'm going to be gone for a while,'" he said with a grin.

When he returned from the competition, it was hard to hide his accomplishment.

"He got a big write-up in the school paper," his mother said. Clufetos found his teachers to be understanding.

"They thought it was pretty cool," he said. Although he travels and practices frequently, Clufetos maintains an "A" average at school.

"I couldn't do it if I wasn't getting good grades," he said.

How does he do it?

"I just use my time well, I guess."
