"Just As Good"

At 7 Blinker street dealt Twist. By trade a substitutionist. Who'd prove to you that left was right. That black was but a shade of white. And ample evidence could find To show you didn't know your mind.

For instance if you asked for "Jink's No Matter What," he'd hand you "Bink's."

Affirm the difference of a letter. Just made his substitute the better. And if you still would "Jink's" demand He'd give that he had none on hand. But "Bink's" was finer, bigger, cheaper. For Twist was that sort of storekeeper.

Upon the death of Turnard Twist None mourned, for such men are not missed.

His checks he cashed for first-class tickets. To pass him through the heavily wicket. And strode up to the gorgeous gate. Where aged Watchman sat in state.

To whom quoth Twist a trifle pale, "Oh, Dear Peter, fit me with a halo. I'll pick me one with flats and sharps. What's this year's mode in robes and things?"

And what's your price for snow-white wings? The Watchman said, "The white are out. But black's the shade you want, no doubt."

And as for harps—a tip my lad. Our red-hot pitchforks are the fad. Among the ultra-smart set. You'll find more forks than harps, I bet.

For halos there is no demand. But we have sulphur still on hand. It's just as cheap, burns just as well. And soon you'll get to like the smell.

These robes of brimstone warp and wool—'Twas then Twist glimpsed the cloven hoof.

Beneath the saintlike watchman's hem. "Look here," said he, "such tricks as them."

I thought I'd left at number seven: I didn't look for such in heaven.

"In heaven? Well my dearest Twist. You surely are an optimist! Your ticket reads in terms precise: 'To (Substitutors') Paradise,' Which is—when spoken of 'fore ladies'—In polished language, just Near-Hades."

President Waters on the Chicago Stock Show

Pres. H. J. Waters of the Kansas Agricultural college, on a recent occasion expressed himself as follows:

"The International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held from November 26 to Dec. 3, is the court of last resort in all matters pertaining to the improvement of live stock. It is the place where all controversies regarding superior merit are settled for the year, and as such contributes more to live stock improvement than any other single agency in America. As an object lesson it is unequaled on the continent. As a means of awakening interest in improved live stock, it and similar shows are indispensable. It is a liberal education in live stock production for any farmer, breeder or student to attend the International."
