"A waterfall!" said Archibald. "Dear me! (ow joll)! Let's go and see it!"

"Como on, then!" cried Agatha First, causting and looking at him expectantly. He rose obediently, but before he could more than utter the words "Deligited, I'm sure!" Agatha Sixth had risen also, and was now confronting bim, as she coldly and haughtily reminded him that he had promised to go and look fac, wild flowers with her. It was prutting the old boy in an awkward, position, I admit, but that's, no excuss for his subsequent behavior. It was on the reprint tip to the casile that I found an opportunity to talk confidentially with Terbune. He-rand I were waiting home, as seven was rather a crowd in the machine and we waited the exercise.

For a moment I felt a curious sense of positions reversed, as if some time not long ago I had been the one to speak so to Terbune. and he to lecture me. He is older than I and has always been the one to fook after me, not I after him. And this feeling almost impelled me to drop my inquisitorial tone. But I thought of the automobile in the woods and the scene I had stumbled upon and grew firm. Really It was too much. I couldn't let him string me like that:

"I don't know what you call it." I retorted indignantly, "but whether you think so or not, you're with Agatha First all the time lately. Why can't you let her alone and 'tod' strictly to business?"
