$1,000 Worth of Ashes

A railroad office was recently the recipient of a box containing ashes for which there was asked $1,000 in cash or a $1,000 bond.

The author of the request explained that while he was going over his securities one evening at home, his three-year-old youngster got his hands on a $1,000 railroad bond and decided to make a beautiful flame. It did. The railroad canceled the ashes and issued a new bond.

—The Wall Street Journal

THIS man was fortunate in being able to prove ownership to the bond. Could you have done so?

The place to keep securities is in a safe deposit box. You can rent one here for a few cents a week.
