Brazilians Have Their

Own Idea of Business

That the Brazilian takes his business, and life in general, in a casual, easy-going stride, is pointed out by Rudyard Kipling, famous English author and poet, in an article (copyright, 1928, by Rudyard Kipling in the U. S. A.) in Liberty Magazine.

"The Brazilian has been used to the English order for generations," explains Kipling, "and he old experienced mercantile firms send out the type of Englishman most likely to be accepted. For the Brazilian has not yet reached the impersonality of ideal business. If he likes you as an individual, he will do more than anything for you. If he doesn't, he will do less than nothing. If he knows little about you, but perceives that you have manners and a few trifles of that sort, he will wait and see. And he has heaps of leisure."

Trapping Tomato Moth

The use of electricity in exterminating tomato worms is being demonstrated on the farm of L. W. Purdum & Sons, Danville, Va. Having tried all recommended measures for the control of the tomato worm without success, Mr. Purdum conceived the idea of trapping the tomato moth—before it could lay eggs. A simple trap with a 40-watt lamp was constructed. A three-quarter pan containing kerosene is suspended from the reflector about 6 inches below the lamp. The lights attract the insects and in flying against the globe they drop into the kerosene underneath.

Now Cast Doubt on

Myles Standish Tale

Capt. Myles Standish may have asked John Alden to propose to Priscilla Mullens for him, as Longfellow wrote (there is historical doubt on the point), but despite the means he may have taken the redoubtable soldier was married twice and left many children.

Proof of this has been found through twenty-one years' record searching by Dr. Myles Standish of Boston, eighth lineal descendant of the soldier.

The legend about which Longfellow wrote "The Courtship of Myles Standish" is not very convincing," said Doctor Standish. "Before coming to America, Captain Standish was in Holland and there he married his first wife, Rose. Rose died the first winter in America. Later the soldier married Barbara, who is said to have been a first cousin of Rose. They had several children. It is because the death of Rose and his marriage to Barbara that the captain is supposed to have courted Priscilla. It is a pretty story."—Miami Daily News.
