The Clown in the Window

By MARY MARKS

PEOPLE were walking slowly, sometimes stopping in front of the main window of Dugan's house furnishing store.

Sarah Taylor made it a principle never to stop to look in store windows. When she came by trolley to Centertown every Saturday morning from her farm, six miles out, it was with a list of needed articles to buy. She kept on walking as she turned to see what the loiterers were gazing at in Dugan's window. There she saw a long, lank clown in white red and white stripes. His face was chalked white and he had a triangular patch of red to define his nose. He was pushing a vacuum cleaner over a small piece of carpet. With his free hand he was beckoning to the loiterers outside, and grinning invitingly.

As Miss Taylor turned to look, the clown looked right at her, grinned and beckoned.

"Well, I won't go in and buy one of his sweepers," she told whoever wished to listen, "but I'll just go in and see Mr. Dugan and tell him what I think of having a fellow standing in his window there making fools out of people passing by."

The clown met her at the door. "I want to let Mr. Dugan know what I think of letting a fool like you—"

Samuel Warren, who had not recognized Sarah Taylor until she entered the store, felt almost as unerved as she, but he had presence of mind to lead her into a corner of the store.

"I always thought," said Sarah, "that I might meet you again, but I never dreamed it was you."

Samuel Warren, who had not recognized Sarah Taylor until she entered the store, felt almost as unerved as she, but he had presence of mind to lead her into a corner of the store.

"I didn't know how hard it is to succeed then, Sam—I—"

"Then you wouldn't be so hard on me now!" Sam asked, and he was leaning so close to Miss Sarah Taylor that the sales folk at Dugan's who chanced to be looking on thought he had surely "landed another order."

One of them approached and Sam changed the tone of his voice. He stood up and extended the cleaner to Miss Taylor.

"So you think this medium size will be satisfactory," he said briskly. "Let me see—what was the address?"

"Barlow's lane, the first place on the right as you turn from the main turnpike," said Sarah in a frightened voice, and then, "but I'll take it on the one condition—that you deliver it personally and give a demonstration at my own house."

Samuel Warren carried a heavy vacuum cleaner when he walked in to the unkempt driveway at the first place on the right as you turn from the main turnpike on Barlow's lane. He had carried it from his roadster, which he left locked a few hundred feet back in the lane.

"You had to carry that all the way from the trolley?" queried Sarah. "And I don't know as I'm going to buy it after all. I haven't any electricity. I just said I wanted you to bring it so you would come out. I wanted to talk to you."

"I have learned to judge men differently from the way I used to. I sent you off that night because I thought you didn't care about getting ahead in the world, and now I don't care if you haven't. Sam, the farm here needs a young man, and we would at least get our living from it. It would be better than having to stand there in the window and look such a fool."

Sam listened as she slowly developed her little speech. Then he laughed and took her in his arms and laughed a little more. Made good was exactly what he had done. He had been taken in by his uncle in the electrical appliances company and had been instrumental in making that company one of the largest in the country. He was now trying to add new force to their selling department.

So he had hit upon the idea of using a method out of the ordinary in window displays. A good-natured-looking clown would attract attention. He could look straight out at the people and beckon to the people as a man in ordinary guise could not do.

He had been doing the territory adjacent to Centertown for two weeks, trying out his idea, and more orders had come in and there were more prospects than had ever been known in that territory before.

"I am so confused!" wailed the distressed Sarah could say. "Please feel that I have never said what I said."

"But why?" urged Sam in the convincing tone that had been one of his big business assets. "If we forget that, then I'll have to take time to tell you how much I want you to marry me and come with me. But if we let the proposal stand, then we won't have to waste time on such preliminaries. We can hop right into my little roadster stowed away down the road and make tracks for the nearest marriage license bureau."

SHERIFF SCHRAM IS A CANDIDATE FOR RE-ELECTION

Announcement Made Of Intention
To Seek Another
Term

SHERIFF FRANK SCHRAM

Sheriff Frank Schram announced his intention of being a candidate in the September primaries to succeed himself in the sheriff's office of Oakland County for another term. He has been connected with the office for eight years, six years of which he has been sheriff. Previously he was connected with the Pontiac police department for seven years.

The statement Sheriff Schram issued to the Enterprise follows: "Many of my friends from all parts of Oakland County have urged me again to become a candidate for nomination for the office of sheriff on the Republican ticket at the next primary election and I have decided to yield to their desire and again present my name for your consideration."

"I have been able during my administration as sheriff to run the office in a manner, which I am sure, has met with the approval of the law-abiding citizens of this county and they have that record as the best guarantee of what I will continue to do in the future if re-elected."

"It has been my constant aim and desire to conduct the affairs of the office honestly, efficiently and economically and I am content to stand on the record that my men and I have made in the enforcement of all laws and the service we have rendered to the public generally."

"I respectfully solicit your support at the primary and I want to take this opportunity to thank the citizens of this county for the splendid support that they have given me in the past and to express my appreciation to the deputy-sheriffs and police departments throughout the county for their helpful co-operation with my office which I know has been a large factor in making my administration a success."—Adv.

DENMARK IS SEVENTH EUROPEAN COUNTRY TO HAVE U. S. PHONE TIE-UP

Transatlantic telephone service between America and Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, was opened through London Friday, June 29. The service on the American side will include all of the United States and Cuba and 37 principal cities of Canada. Copenhagen, with a population estimated at 775,000, has a total of approximately 126,000 telephones.

Denmark is the seventh European country to be connected with America by telephone. The overseas circuit is now in operation from 5:30 a. m. to 9 p. m. eastern time. The cost of a call between any Michigan point and Copenhagen is $54.75 for the first three minutes and $18.25 for each additional minute.

The extension to Copenhagen puts the United States in communication with ten foreign countries. The service in Europe includes all points in Great Britain and Germany, Paris, Copenhagen and important cities in Belgium, Holland and Sweden.
