PARKS

Most people envision hunting as a long trek to a secluded, privately owned camp, but in Michigan people hunt wildlife in more than 72,000 acres in 14 state park and recreation areas in Southeastern Michigan.

"Michigan is one of a few states across this nation in which state park lands are available for hunting." DNR Director Roland Harmes soid.
"In the Metro-Detroit area, people have easy access to many state recreation areas, most within an hour drive of their home."

M DEER MANAGEMENT OPTIONS

OPTIONS

Regulated hunting. . . the fundamental basis of successful deer management. This statement is supported by over 50 years of research and management experience. Whitetails Unlimited Inc., with financial assistance from Winchester Ammunition, has published and made available, free of charge, an educational booklet titled "An Evaluation of Deer Management Options." This publication explains the rationale behind regulated funting versus the utilization of other deer management options.

Highly emotional animal rights media campaigns typi-cally focus on inaccurate por-trayals of regulated hunting seasons and methods of har-vest. This publication gives the sportsmen and women the ac-curate information they need to combat the antihunting sen-timent. The booklet also serves as great refresher for the seaas a great refresher for the sea-soned instructor that under-stands the important role regu-lated hunting plays in today's management of the whitetail

Over the years, the tales usually grow taller than the antiers themselves, but always draw the dire attention of the list of the season, check with a clerk at a local sporting goods store. These outlets are besleged by rampaging Nimrods at this time of year searching for thal little something extra which will boost them into the ranks of those wearing the "Successful Hunter" patch. Gimicks and gadgets like electric sox, scent eliminator, deer calls, buck lure, trail markers, hot seats, and the latest pattern in blaze-orange hunting epparel all make the "Things I Need" list of many hopeful hunters.

By now, most of the prehunt shopping has been taken care of except by those last-minute-joes who will still be spending during the second week of the hunt. Now comes the midnight ritual of sorting, checking and ritual of sorting, checking and packing.

There seems to be an unchartered psychological pattern hidden deep in the subconscious of the hunter. It leaps out, like a thief, in the deep of the night robbing its victim of sleep. It's a precautionary sense that shakes the hunter from the midst of a deep sleep with a reminder of things left unpacked like a compass, rope, binoculars or extra builets. These items will undoubtedly be left behind unless "hunter" turns "gatherer" in the middle of the night.

For some, sleep will also be interrupted in the nights leading up to the hunt by nightmares of jammed guns, misfires and the ever-present handshaking-nervousness of buck fever.

Many bemedies have been testcver-present nanashaking-ner-vousness of buck fever. Many remedies have been teat-ed over the years but only one surefire cure has ever been found for what hunters refer to as sim-ply "The Fever." To break "The Fever," one only needs a dose of fresh forest air at sunrise on open-ing day while watching a buck work his way down a nearby trail. The 1993 firearms deer season begins one-half hour before sunrise Monday morning and the outlook for the season looks bright.

Because of the large amount the standing corn throughout much of southern Michigan during the '92 season and the snowy, wet conditions that hammered many areas of the north during the first week of the hunt last year, many hunters were disgrantited, to say the least, about not seeing a lot of deer. But because of this lack of action in sources, many of last year's "ghost zones" will turn out to be this year's "the spots' because the buck numbers will be up in these areas.

buck numbers will be up in these areas.

Still, the Department of Natural Resources reports that hunters took 161,000 bucks and 88,000 does last year, despite the unfavorable conditions. Although these numbers are significantly lower than Michigan's record harvest of 194,000 bucks and 140,000 does in 1989, they are still quite impressive and translate into a 33-percent success rate.

"It should be a pretty good season, overall," said Ed Langenau. DNR big gome specialist. "I expect the harvest will be down at little bit from last year because we issued 25-percent lees antierless tags. The herd is close to the population objective we're looking for so we've issued less permits this year than in the past.

"Our field personnel report a very good buck-to-doe ratio with a tot of 2½ year old bucks and older," added Langenau. "These deer are much wiser and harder to hunt, but I expect to see somice bucks taken this year."

Get into the woods early Monday and enjoy the season, but above all be smart and be sale. Hunters and anglers are urged to report their success. Questions and comments are also encouraged.
